Mourners gather near the grave site of Mark Roidt, 28, on Friday after funeral and burial services for Roidt at Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic Church in Dobie, Wis. The funeral for Roidt was the first to be held for six deer hunters shot and killed in northwestern Wisconsin last Sunday. Chai Yang, of St. Paul, Minn., is accused of fatally shooting the hunters when they confronted him about trespassing on land owned by two of the victims.

Chief Justice Rehnquist absent: Chief Justice William Rehnquist, who was diagnosed with thyroid cancer in October, will again not be present when the Supreme Court reconvenes to hear oral arguments on Monday, court officials said Friday. His absence will apparently continue for at least two more weeks.

Rehnquist missed arguments in the first two weeks of November, though he had initially said he could be on the bench during that time.

Friday's announcement was the latest indication that Rehnquist, 80, hasn't yet recovered sufficiently to take up the full range of his normal activities.

Colorado rock slide: Crews reopened a lane of traffic in each direction Friday on a major Colorado highway, a day after a rock slide sent boulders as big as vans crashing onto the road.

It could take months before the stretch of Interstate 70 is completely fixed, said Colorado Department of Transportation spokeswoman Stacy Stegman.

More than three dozen boulders landed on I-70 early Thursday, some embedded 6 feet deep. State officials closed a 2-mile section of the main east-west artery through Colorado, and rerouted Thanksgiving Day traffic along an almost 220-mile detour to the north.

Transportation officials estimated that there was $1 million in damage.

Halliburton investigation: A third or more of the government property Halliburton Co. was paid to manage for the U.S.-led Coalition Provisional Authority in Iraq could not be located by auditors, investigative reports to Congress show.

Halliburton's KBR subsidiary "did not effectively manage government property" and auditors could not locate hundreds of CPA items worth millions of dollars in Iraq and Kuwait this summer and fall, Inspector General Stuart W. Bowen reported to Congress in two reports.

Halliburton and the Pentagon deny wrongdoing, and say they are cooperating in all investigations.

Land mine conference: The United States will not attend a major review conference next week about a 1997 international treaty on land mines because of the cost of participation and disagreement with crucial elements of the pact.

In making the announcement Friday, the State Department said the decision should not be seen as a sign of U.S. indifference to the land-mine problem.

"We share common cause with all those who seek to protect innocent civilians from indiscriminately used land mines," State Department spokesman Adam Ereli said.

The conference, starting Monday in Nairobi, Kenya, will review compliance with the Ottawa Convention on anti-personnel mines.

ASEAN finalizes China pact: Southeast Asian ministers Saturday finalized a free trade pact with China and a host of other accords to be adopted at a leaders summit, but touchy topics like the lack of democracy in Myanmar and Islamic unrest in Thailand were swept under the rug.

The Association of Southeast Asian Nations meeting was a prelude to a two-day summit of the group's 10 leaders starting Monday. They also will meet with heads of governments from China, Japan, South Korea, India, Australia and New Zealand.

The summit is the first such international

Turnpike strike: Union Pennsylvania Turnpike worker Lester Borrell pickets at the turnpike entrance in Mount Hope, Pa., Thursday. Turnpike managers began collecting tolls early Thanksgiving Day as the first strike in the turnpike's 64-year history entered its second day. Pennsylvania Turnpike officials have opted against waiving tolls Sunday as a way to cope with an ongoing strike sure to be made worse by heavy holiday travel. Tolls were waived Wednesday, the first day of the strike. Turnpike workers have been without a contract since September 2003. Union officials say the main reason for the strike is concern about job losses, although the two sides also are fighting over work benefits.

CIA nuclear report: Pakistan on Saturday criticized a news report that said Iran's nuclear weapons program received more help from a renegade Pakistani scientist than previously disclosed.

The New York Times story was based on a new CIA report suggesting that Abdul Qadeer Khan — considered a national hero as the father of Pakistan's nuclear bomb — provided more extensive help to Iran's atomic program in the 1990s than Washington has previously disclosed.

This week, the CIA posted on its Web site the unclassified version of the report to Congress detailing reported efforts by Iran, Iraq, Libya, North Korea and Syria to obtain chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear weapons technology.

S. Korea nuclear dispute: South Korea welcomed a U.N. nuclear watchdog's decision not to refer its past illicit nuclear experiments to the U.N. Security Council, while North Korea condemned the U.N. agency's "double standards" on Saturday.

North Korea's state-run Central Radio, monitored by all-reps South Korean exhibit channel YTN, accused the U.N. International Atomic Energy Agency of giving "tacit approval" to South Korea's nuclear ambitions.

On Friday, IAEA's board of governors criticized South Korea for conducting plutonium and uranium experiments in 1982 and 2000, but refrained from tougher options, including possible referral to the Security Council.

Palestinian security breakdown: A top Palestinian official said Saturday he would dismantle an elite security unit accused of abuse and corruption in a first step toward overhauling the tangled network of Palestinian security forces.

Palestinian Preventive Security chief Brig. Gen. Rashid Abu Shbak also announced plans to merge the ruling Fatah party's myriad militant groups to make them more accountable for their actions and to end the gun chaos on Palestinian streets.

The United States has long demanded a major overhaul of the Palestinian security services but faced stiff resistance from Yasser Arafat, who used the forces to maintain his hold on power.

Sri Lanka tightens security: Authorities bolstered security around the Sri Lankan capital Saturday ahead of a planned speech by the reclusive leader of the Tamil Tiger rebels.

It was unclear what Tiger chief Velupillai Prabhakaran's speech — to commemorate the rebels' "Martyrs' Day" — would touch upon, but he was expected to discuss the future course of stalled peace talks between his Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam and the Sri Lankan government.

The guerrillas celebrate Martyrs' Day on Nov. 27 each year to commemorate the deaths of thousands of rebel fighters since the insurgency began more than two decades ago. Past celebrations have been marred by attacks on military and economic targets.

U.N. sex abuse investigation: Sexual exploitation of women and girls by U.N. peacekeepers and bureaucrats in the U.N. mission in Congo "appears to be significant, wide-spread and ongoing," according to a confidential U.N. report that documents cases of pedophilia, prostitution and rape.

The report by a U.N. peacekeeping official who recently visited Congo says that some U.N. personnel paid $1 to $3, or bartered food or the promise of a job, for sex. In some cases, U.N. officials allegedly raped women and girls and then offered them food or money to make it look as if they had engaged in prostitution.

Senior U.N. officials in New York said they have received 150 allegations of sexual abuse by U.N. personnel in Congo.

N. Korea alleges psychological warfare: North Korea on Saturday condemned news reports that portraits of totalitarian leader Kim Jong Il have been removed from public places, calling them "a foolish attempt to take the sun down from the sky."

North Korea's state-run news agency, KCNA, said the reports were spread as part of a "psychological warfare" by the United States and other "hostile forces" to undermine the communist regime.

North Korea warned that the psychological warfare will further hamper international efforts to resolve a dispute over its nuclear weapons programs.

"Any plot to defame our supreme leadership is nothing more than a foolish attempt to make the sun shine from the sky," KCNA said.

Iraqi government says it won't postpone vote

Spokesman: Jan. 30 date still in effect

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — The Iraqi government Saturday brushed aside Sunni Muslim demands to delay the Jan. 30 election, and a spokesman of the majority Shiite community called the date "nonnegotiable."

Insurgents stepped up attacks, blasting U.S. patrols in Baghdad and killing a U.S. soldier north of the capital.

Clashes also occurred north of Baghdad, and U.S. and Iraqi forces fought a three-hour gunbattle with insurgents who overran a town hall and two police stations, local officials said.

Talk of delaying the election gained momentum after influential Sunni Muslim politicians urged the government to postpone the voting for six months to give authorities time to secure polling stations and to convince Sunni clerics to abandon their call for an electoral boycott.

But the spokesman for interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, a secular Shiite, told reporters Saturday that the government was sticking by the Jan. 30 date after receiving assurances from the Iraqi Electoral Commission that an election could take place even in Sunni areas wracked by insurgency.

"The Iraqi government is determined ... to hold elections on time," spokesman Thair al-Naqeeb said. "The Iraqi government, led by the prime minister, is calling on all aspects of the Iraqi people to participate in the elections and to contribute in the elections to build a strong democratic country."

That position was strongly endorsed Saturday by politicians and clerics from the Shiite community, which comprises about 60 percent of Iraq's nearly 26 million people and which has been long clamoring for an election.

A hooded Iraqi policeman in Baghdad on Saturday reads a poster with a "fatwa," or religious ruling, issued by Shiite cleric Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani, encouraging people to vote in Iraq's upcoming elections.

In the Shiite holy city of Najaf, Mohammed Hussein al-Hakim, son of Grand Ayatollah Mohammed Said al-Hakim, told reporters that the Shiite leadership would not accept a delay and called this position "nonnegotiable."

He said elections were "the most legitimate way on the international level to express the will of the people" and that "all parties have agreed on this date and we cannot take back this position for any reason."

In Baghdad, a major Shiite party, the Supreme Council for the Islamic Republic in Iraq or SCIRI, said that 42 parties and individuals from the Shiite and Turkmen communities had agreed on a statement affirming support for the Jan. 30 date.

SCIRI official Redha Jawad

Taqi said the 42 included the Islamic Dawa, the other leading Shiite party, and the Iraqi National Congress of Ahmad Chalabi, whose spokesman Entifaah Qanbar had already criticized the postponement call.

In other developments, an American soldier from the 1st Infantry Division was killed Saturday when a roadside bomb exploded near a U.S. patrol about 40 miles north of Baghdad, the military said.

Two U.S. military vehicles, including an armored shuttle bus, were damaged by a bomb Saturday on the road to Baghdad International Airport, which the State Department considers one of the most dangerous routes in the country. An al-Qaida-affiliated group claimed responsibility for the attack.

Three civilians died and a dozen were injured Saturday in other bomb attacks against U.S. convoys in the Baghdad area, U.S. and Iraqi officials said.

About 100 insurgents overran the city hall and two police stations in Khaldi, 40 miles north of the capital but were driven off by a three-hour gunbattle, municipal official Said Ahmed Abbas said. Al-Jazeera television said three Iraqi security guards were killed.

South of the capital, U.S., British and Iraqi security forces continued operations against suspected insurgent strongholds near the towns of Latifiyah and Mahmoudiya. A U.S. military spokesman said Saturday a total of 126 suspected insurgents have been arrested since the operation began Tuesday.

U.S. deaths in Iraq

The Associated Press

As of Friday, at least 1,233 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. At least 961 died as a result of hostile action, the Defense Department said. The figures include three military civilians.

The Defense Department did not provide an update Friday.

The British military has reported 74 deaths; Italy, 19; Poland, 13; Spain, 11; Ukraine, nine; Bulgaria, seven; Slovakia, three; Estonia, Thailand and the Netherlands, two each; and Denmark, El Salvador, Hungary and Latvia have reported one death each.

Since May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 1,095 U.S. military members have died, according to AP's count. That includes at least 852 deaths resulting from hostile action, according to the military's numbers.

The latest deaths reported by the military:

■ Two Marines were killed while conducting house-to-house searches in Fallujah, Iraq.

The latest identifications reported by the military:

■ Marine Sgt. Nick Nolte, 25, Falls City, Neb.; died Wednesday of wounds suffered Nov. 8 when an explosive detonated near his vehicle near Baghdad, assigned to the 2nd Low Altitude Air Defense Battalion, 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing, Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, N.C.

Iraq briefs Iran on security, requests aid against insurgents at border

BY ALI AKBAR DAREINI

The Associated Press

Iranian Prime Minister Mohammad Khatami, right, greets Iraqi Vice President Ibrahim al-Jaafari on Saturday at the start of their official meeting in Tehran, Iran.

TEHRAN, Iran — An Iraqi vice president briefed neighboring Iran on his country's ongoing insurgency Saturday, demanding the Tehran government's assistance in curbing the infiltration of terrorists into Iraq, his adviser said.

Vice President Ibrahim al-Jaafari met Iranian Prime Minister Mohammad Khatami just days before Iran hosts interior ministers of Iraq's neighboring states, plus Egypt, for a regional conference.

"Al-Jaafari presented President Khatami with a detailed report about security problems in Iraq and briefed him on how insurgents, after the Fallujah fighting, were changing their tactics from a military phase into a political agenda to undermine the upcoming elections," Javad Taleb, an adviser to al-Jaafari, told The Associated Press.

Taleb quoted al-Jaafari as telling Khatami that Iraq wanted the Tehran conference of ministers to help stem the insurgency to allow for peaceful staging of the first post-Saddam democratic elections.

"Iraq needs the security help of its neighbors and it hopes neighbors, during the Tehran conference, give adequate promises to curb any infiltration through their borders into Iraq," Taleb quoted al-Jaafari as telling Khatami.

Washington has accused Tehran of interfering in Iraq and sending money and infiltrators to foment the insurgency there. Iran has criticized the U.S.-led campaign against insurgents.

Iran has denied the charges, but said it did not rule out the possibility that some infiltrators might have crossed its border illegally.

A spokesman for Iraqi Prime Minister Ayad Allawi has downplayed the likelihood of delaying the Jan. 30 elections, despite calls by Sunni Muslim politicians and a number of political parties to postpone the vote because of security concerns.

Khatami, according to state-run radio, also believes the Iraq elections should be held on time.

The two-day meeting of interior ministers from Iraq, Syria, Jordan, Kuwait, Turkey, Saudi Arabia, Iran and Syria begins Tuesday.

The ministers are expected to be accompanied by senior security officials, who can share intelligence on militants and other people suspected of being linked to the insurgency in Iraq.

"It is hoped that the Tehran meeting will produce practical results in halting terrorist infiltrations into Iraq, and also assist in locating terrorist groups operating from within other countries in the region, potentially freezing their funding," a Friday statement from the Iraqi Interior Ministry said.

Analysts say Iran hopes its hosting of the meeting will send a signal, particularly to the United States, that it recognizes the threat al-Qaida poses both to Iraq and to itself.

U.S. troops face combat on a wing and a prayer

Many find faith while facing death in battle

BY STEVE LIEWER

FORWARD OPERATING BASE MACKENZIE, Iraq — When the back end of Spc. Derrick Lawson's Bradley fighting vehicle jumped from the force of the explosion, he thought of one thing to do.

"I saw the smoke and the flames, and I knew we'd been hit," said Lawson, 21, of the 1st Infantry Division's 1st Squadron, 4th Cavalry Regiment. "My first reaction was to start praying."

The Bradley lurched to a halt, its driver already dead. Amid the screaming, shooting, confusion and thickening smoke, Lawson saw his platoon sergeant, Staff Sgt. Metcower Jordan, struggling with the jammed rear hatch. He closed his eyes and desperately said a second prayer.

Someone answered. "Then I looked up, and the door was open," Lawson said, 3½ months after the July 21 attack. "I just jumped out and ran down the street."

Walking daily through the valley of the shadow of death has not necessarily produced a lot of road-to-Damascus religious conversions among combat troops, chaplains, say. But it has pushed some back toward the religion of their youth.

"Every individual fortifies themselves in different ways," said Capt. Gary Fisher, 39, of Alexandria, La., the 1-4 Cavalry's chaplain. "A lot of life's questions are being asked and answered."

Lawson spent some time in the hospital recovering from smoke inhalation and burns before returning to duty. He's had a lot of time to reflect. He attended church with his family growing up in Spring Lake, N.C., but God has taken a more central place in his life now.

"It was a wake-up call. You can go at any time," Lawson said. "I'm in an environment where, every day, people are out there trying to kill me. (Now) I do things differently. I try to be a better person."

Sgt. Orville Whitlock, 30, of Lynchburg, Va., is squad leader for a 9th Engineer Battalion platoon attached to the 1-4 Cavalry. On May 5, someone fired a rocket-propelled grenade at his Humvee. Shrapnel injured Whitlock and the four other soldiers inside, but no one died.

"I'm thankful to God that nothing worse happened than that," Whitlock said. "Before I go out the gate, I say a silent prayer that we get through everything we experience."

"I pray more in Iraq than I have in years," said Capt. John Trylich, 30, of Los Angeles, commander of the 1-4 Cavalry's Troop B "Buildings."

Spc. Steve Wetmore, 20, of Union City, Pa., serves in Whitlock's engineer platoon. He said he doesn't go to church, but he does believe in God.

To hedge his bets, he wears a cross on his dog tags.

Under fire, Wetmore said, he thinks about his job more than religion. Two weeks ago, he was manning a traffic checkpoint when rebels fired mortar rounds directly at their position.

"When we got mortared the other day," he said. "The last thing I was thinking about was praying."

Spc. Jose Bartual, 26, of New York City, said he is a nonpracticing Roman Catholic, but he comes from a religious family. He's been in several intense fire fights and survived the explosion of a bomb underneath his armored personnel carrier.

"My 8-year-old niece won't let a day go by that she isn't praying for me," Bartual said. In fact, the girl worried so much that after his midtown leave her family told her he wasn't returning to Iraq.

up in Puerto Rico. Now they both serve with Trylich in the 1-4 Cavalry's B Troop, based in Schweinfurt, Germany.

Together they've dodged bullets and survived roadside bombs. They also share a fatalistic philosophy about life and death and combat.

"I believe," Torres said, "if it's your time, it's your time."

"I pray to God and whatnot, but I don't go to church," Colon said.

"But when I get back, I'm going to start."

Pfc. Joshua Schmidt, 21, of Sacramento, Calif., arrived in Iraq last spring without religion. But after surviving a mine strike, an RPG attack, and several gun battles, he's beginning to wonder.

"I was agnostic when I first came down here," said Schmidt, of the 9th Engineers. "I'd still say I'm agnostic, but I definitely believe he's out there."

"I'm either damn lucky," he added, "or somebody's looking out for me."

Troops mark Thanksgiving with fitness, feasting

Soldiers at Forward Operating Base Speicher in Tikrit, Iraq, got a little "flex time" recently at the base's first body-building competition.

Organized by Sgt. 1st Class Woody B. Carter of the 67th Combat Support Hospital, the event drew 15 male and female body builders and more than 350 spectators, according to a U.S. Army news release.

A five-member panel judged participants on overall body symmetry, confidence in posing, endurance and attitude. Winners of each class were awarded Army and Air Force Exchange Services gift certificates, a trophy, protein supplements and a subscription to Muscle Fitness magazine.

Burger King in Kandahar

U.S. and coalition troops in Afghanistan got another taste of home recently when the Army and Air Force Exchange Service opened a Burger King at the Kandahar Airfield.

The new fast-food outlet fired up its grills for the first time last month, drawing throngs of whopper-seekers to its south-eastern Afghanistan location, according to a U.S. Army news release. It is the second

Run, then eat

Soldiers at Forward Operating Base Palwoda in Balad, Iraq, decided to burn off a few calories before eating their Thanksgiving meal this year.

The troops started their holiday with a 1.5-mile run, dubbed the "turkey trot." The race, run in full body armor, was won by Maj. Kirby Hanson, Task Force 1st Battalion, 77th Armor Regiment's executive officer, according to a U.S. Army news release.

"It was a good run," said Maj. David Hubner, commander of Task Force 1-77. "I think wearing the body armor made it a lot more fun."

After the run, Brig. Gen. John G. Morgan, 1st Infantry Division assistant division commander for maneuver visited the base to thank the soldiers.

When it came time to eat, Maj. Hubner and Col. Randall Dragon, 2nd Brigade Combat Team Commander helped the cooks serve the Thanksgiving meal.

"It was our way of thanking the soldiers for all they do for their leadership and their country every day," Hubner said.

Military scrambles to make MRE eggs better

BY JAMES HANNAH
The Associated Press

The military is trying to make the egg edible for soldiers.

Researchers at Ohio State University and two other schools are working on a new process designed to produce a tastier, more tender egg that can be used in combat rations.

The use of eggs in Meals, Ready to Eat pouches — or MREs — was discontinued about 10 years ago after soldiers complained they were rubbery, tasted bad and had a grayish tint.

"Eggs are a real challenge to get that quality that is appropriate to heat and serve," said Patrick Dunne, senior adviser in the Combat Rations Directorate at the U.S. Army Natick Soldier Center near Boston.

Dunne, a biochemist, said the previous process used to preserve the MRE eggs — which came in the form of an egg-and-ham omelet — involved subjecting the eggs to high temperatures for more than 90 minutes.

"You've got thoroughly cooked eggs to say the least," he said.

Gary Holben, commander of the Army Reserve 705th Transportation Company based in Dayton, Ohio, said the military will have to improve the eggs a lot over the old ham omelet for them to become a hot item among soldiers.

Holben, who likes eggs, said the omelet had a rubbery texture and tasted lousy.

"And the appearance was really bad," he said. "It looked like green eggs and ham."

Researchers at Ohio State, Washington State University and the Illinois Institute of Technology are experimenting with a way to preserve scrambled-egg patties by combining high temperature with high pressure. By applying pressure of 100,000 pounds per square inch, the process only takes about six minutes.

"The pressure kills the bacteria and at the same time doesn't affect the quality," said researcher V.M. "Bala" Balasubramanian, a food scientist at Ohio State. "There seems to be a better acceptance of this product."

The researchers have been working on the project for the past 16 months with a $250,000 grant. Balasubramanian said the researchers have been experimenting with different egg recipes.

"We're kind of going through tryouts," he said.

Dunne said the eggs must be able to withstand storage temperatures of 80 degrees for at least three years and still be edible at the end of that time.

"We're trying to cross a technological boundary to make this shelf-stable stuff," he said.

The scrambled-egg patties being tested contain about 20 percent cheese. The eggs have been taste-tested by a consumer panel at Washington State.

"They blessed it," Dunne said.

Next, the eggs will be taste-tested by food technologists at the Massachusetts soldier center, who will rate the eggs for flavor and tenderness. The packaging system must still be finished, and the Food and Drug Administration must approve the eggs before they can be sent to soldiers for field tests.

MREs come in plastic pouches that fit into the pockets of military field clothing. They are used primarily by Army soldiers and Marines on maneuvers, patrols or involved in combat.

Dunne hopes the new egg item can be introduced next year, but said it may not get into the hands of troops until a year or two later.

V.M. "Bala" Balasubramanian, at Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, is shown with eggs ready to eat and how the soldier would see them in the package.

Offensives generate surge of detainees

By BRADLEY GRAHAM

The Washington Post

ABU GHRAIB, Iraq — More aggressive U.S. military operations in Iraq over the past two months have generated a surge in detainees, nearly doubling the number held by U.S. forces to about 8,300, according to the U.S. general in charge of detention operations.

Since early October, the number of detainees in U.S. custody has grown by about 4,000 as a result of assaults on insurgents in Samarra, Fallujah, Mosul, north Babul province and elsewhere, Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Miller said Friday. With additional U.S. raids being planned as part of a stepped-up effort to crush the insurgency ahead of national elections in January, the number of detainees is expected to continue to grow in coming weeks.

The large influx of prisoners is putting stress on U.S. detention operations, providing the biggest test yet of new facilities and procedures adopted in the wake of the Abu Ghraib prison scandal this past spring, Miller and other officers said in interviews here. So far, the flow has been manageable, he said, but many detainees have not yet made it through the system.

Influx tests new procedures adopted after Abu Ghraib prison scandal

The mistreatment of Iraqi detainees by U.S. soldiers at this facility last autumn was documented in photographs and videos that shocked the world when they surfaced in the spring and prompted a series of investigations. While about 50 military police, intelligence, medical and civilian contract personnel were eventually implicated, investigators also blamed senior leadership for failing to provide clear guidance or exercise adequate oversight.

U.S. commanders responded to the scandal by implementing new controls over military police and intelligence operations and by bringing in Army corrections specialists to advise and help run the facility.

The prison building that was the site of abuses by American guards has been turned over to Iraqi authorities and is used to jail criminals. Detainees in U.S. military custody are kept in recently constructed camps with climate-controlled tents and such amenities as movies and a library.

Miller, who has been supervising detention operations since April, said many of the changes, including a computerized record-keeping system, have enabled guards and interrogators to operate more efficiently.

Col. Ron Black

Joint Interrogation Debriefing Center

Also helpful is the experience soldiers have gained since taking over at the start of the year from the units involved in the scandal.

Of the 8,300 detainees, about 4,600 are at Camp Bucca, a U.S. detention facility in southern Iraq that held 2,500 two months ago.

The total here at Abu Ghraib is about 2,000, and about 1,700 remain in the custody of field commanders, whose troops are conducting initial screening interviews. Miller said recent interrogations have yielded some "high-value information" about insurgents' hiding places, movements and methods.

Detainees of particular interest to military intelligence are kept at Abu Ghraib. Many of the rest are sent to Camp Bucca. At Abu Ghraib, the pace of interrogations has picked up, from 180 a week to 210. "The troops have been working around the clock, but we've been able to manage the influx," said Col. Ron Black, who heads the Joint Interrogation Debriefing Center here.

To prepare for more detainees, new wooden facilities are being constructed at Camp Bucca that will expand capacity to 6,000 by January, Miller said.

Allegations of abuse against detainees are down about 60 percent from what they were in May and average about 10 a month, Miller said.

Only two or three a month tend to be substantiated, the general said. "These are not intentional. These are overly aggressive kinds of things, like combat takeaways," Miller said.

Marines mull future of Fallujah

By KATARINA KRATOVA

The Associated Press

FALLUJAH, Iraq — At first glance, the U.S. Marines saw nothing extraordinary about a baby crib in the corner of a bombed-out house in Fallujah. But when Lance Cpl. Nick Fenezia threw back the blankets, a Kalashnikov rifle and bullet-proof vest lay on the tiny mattress.

"Man, did you have to be just another mummy?" Fenezia mused of the baby's missing father, employing American shorthand for Iraq's insurgents — mujahideen — or Muslim holy warriors. "Couldn't you have stopped shooting at us and watched your baby grow instead?"

U.S. and Iraqi forces continue to fight sporadic gunbattles with rebel holdouts as they clear Fallujah of weapons. On Friday, Lt. Gen. John F. Sattler, commanding general of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, said only about half the buildings in the city had been cleared even though organized resistance has collapsed.

But as the battle calms, U.S. forces are reflecting on the fight, their often-unseen foes and the future of a city that lies in ruins.

Fenezia, of Red Bank, N.J., also turned up a bayonet, ammunition and a baby photo — all lying amid walls shattered by the Americans' devastating firepower.

A burst of gunfire rattled nearby in southern Fallujah, but the Marines shrugged it off.

"They haven't got idea what they are shooting. It's just mental games they play. They know they're dead and there is no way out," says Lance Cpl. Brian Wyer, 21, of Chouteau, Okla. "This is nothing, not after the intense battle here."

Marine, Army and Iraqi troops opened the Fallujah assault Nov. 8 with massive artillery and air strikes pounding the city before tanks, armored vehicles and troops on foot pushed in from the north.

An Iraqi Red Crescent worker looks at a deserted and devastated street in Fallujah, Iraq, on Friday. U.S. and Iraqi forces continue to fight sporadic gunbattles with rebel holdouts as they clear Fallujah of weapons. But as the battle calms, U.S. forces are reflecting on the fight, their often-unseen foes and the future of a city which lies in ruins.

They battled for days with rebels who had been fortifying the city since April, when planners called off a Marine assault amid widespread outcry over reports of civilian casualties emanating from Fallujah's hospital, numbers U.S. officers called inflated.

The U.S. military says upward of 1,200 insurgents died in the latest offensive. More than 1,000 suspects were captured, and more than 50 U.S. forces along with eight Iraqis were killed.

Marines are now clearing weapons from the city on the banks of the Euphrates River and preparing for the return of civilians, who once numbered up to 300,000 by some tallies, though U.S. officers estimated that only 50,000 to 60,000 were in the city before the well-publicized attack.

As the fight dies down, Marines are finally finding free time to reflect on the furious battle. The Americans wonder how Fallujah could have devolved into what officers say was a center from which rebels staged bombings, beheadings and attacks across Iraq.

Cpl. Perry Bessant, 21, says Marines are "like a detective agency, coming to investigate, to put the pieces together of what Fallujah was."

"It was a space for so many foreign fighters. I just can't believe the locals tolerated them," adds Bessant, from Mullins, S.C. "Maybe they were terrified of them. Maybe I'd feel like that too if someone said they'd kill my family," replies Staff Sgt. Alexandre Pashos, 38, from New York City.

New York, New Jersey, South Carolina, Oklahoma: The Marines' homes are all a far piece from this central Iraq city in the middle of dusty plain, once dominated by Muslim men in red-checked scarves and black masks who try to kill the American "infidel" invaders.

When Fallujians do return en masse, they will find many parts of their city in ruins, with bank buildings scorched, mosques bombed, shops destroyed, cars burned, and homes for sale with open windows and cupboards and drawers rifled by foreigners.

"It's going to be difficult putting Fallujah together again, but not impossible," said Pashos. "That is the saddest, to have it all come to this, all these people's homes destroyed."

Navy surveys newest sailors

NAVAL STATION ROTI, Spain — The Navy wants its newest sailors to take an online survey that will help researchers determine why sailors decide to stay or leave the service.

A Navy memo raised this month ordered commanding officers throughout the fleet to encourage enlisted personnel with more than one year but less than four years of service to complete the voluntary survey.

The survey is part of the First Watch Research Project and is being conducted by the Millington, Tenn.-based Navy Personnel Research, Studies and Technology Department.

Survey questions ask about such things as career progress, their experiences during training and how well the Navy prepared them for their job, said Rorie Harris, a department personnel research psychologist.

"More specific items ask about aspects of the Navy and how they influence decisions to stay or leave the Navy," Harris said in an e-mail to Stars and Stripes. "Other questions inquire about how they get along with their co-workers and what factors influence them to stay or get out of the Navy."

Although the Navy has reached retention goals the last several years, retaining "first-term" sailors has historically been an issue for the service.

Since April 2002, the Navy has surveyed recruits before they entered boot camp, during the last week of boot camp and during the last week in apprentice school.

The 15-minute online survey focuses on sailors with at least a year in the Navy. The Web-based survey started Nov. 12 and will be available until Dec. 22.

Eligible sailors can access the questions at www.navy.mil.

Information from the survey will help researchers to evaluate training programs and pinpoint factors in retention and attrition. The results will be available in early 2005 online at www.nprst.navy.mil, Harris said.

Experts debate success of Bosnia mission

EAGLE BASE, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The CD stacks, hawkling assorted bootleg items, are scattered about. The haystacks — sometimes in fields, sometimes on horse-drawn carts and sometimes on farmers' backs — dot the landscape. And the red signs with skulls and crossbones that warn of land mines aren't going anywhere soon.

But U.S. troops, who entered Bosnia in December 1995 for the start of what President Clinton said was a one-year mission, are in their final days in country. All but about 250 will be gone within the week.

Tens of thousands of American troops — the exact number might never be known — have spent years in Bosnia as part of Task Force Eagle during the last nine years. But to some, it's debatable how much the mission has accomplished.

"This has been a very long year," said Ted Carpenter, vice president of defense and foreign policy studies for the Cato Institute, a conservative think tank in Washington, D.C., with a hint of sarcasm.

"You could argue that the conflict hasn't restarted, so it's been a success," said David Chandler, author of "Bosnia: Faking Democracy after Dayton." "But I think that's being a bit dishonest."

A better Bosnia?

Ask those who have been involved in the American mission, though, and one is likely to get a different answer.

"I dramatically disagree with anyone who says this mission has not been successful," said Gen. B.B. Bell, U.S. Army Europe commander. "Anyone who says there's not substantial progress was not here nine years ago."

Maj. Gen. William Nash commanded that American contingent on its first mission, dubbed Implementation Force. The 1st AD controlled the sector north of Sarajevo to the Croatian border for a year. Then the mission changed names to Stabilization Force, or SFOR.

Nash, now retired from the military and a senior fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, visited the country last week to observe the end of the U.S. mission.

"I think by any measure you would choose to end Bosnia a better than it was nine years ago," he said. "That's not to say that everything's perfect. But everything, I feel, is better."

The new commander of the sector, Finnish Brig. Gen. Juha Kipila was one of Nash's battalion commanders in IFOR. He was as dissive as his American counterparts.

"The situation is totally different (today)," he said. "There have been an enormous amount of positive changes in the area."

Kipila pointed to an improved infrastructure as one of the most obvious changes. Another is that people aren't openly attacking each other. According to most estimates, more than 200,000 people died in Bosnia as it attempted October 1998 — The 1st Cavalry Division takes over command of a greatly reduced U.S. presence. About 7,000 American troops — about one-third of the original force — are now in Bosnia.

Nov. 24, 2004 — Task Force Eagle is disestablished and most U.S. troops prepare to head home. Dec. 2, 2004 — SFOR will become EUFOR as the European Union takes control of peacekeeping operations in Bosnia from NATO.

Internal woes

But some critics of international operations in Bosnia say American troops haven't helped solve anything.

"Generally, having troops on the ground has little to do with the real problems of Bosnia," Chandler said.

The largest problem, critics say, is the nature of country itself.

The country's political, judicial and economic systems are still largely in shambles. The most recent estimate by the CIA suggests the country has a 40 percent unemployment rate. Corruption is rampant in many parts of the society, military officials say, and many residents don't trust the police or the court system.

A senior lecturer at Westminster University in England, Chandler says there's been no shortage of international organizations trying to help in the country.

"Practically every international agency is playing a role in or interacting in Bosnian politics," he said. But he said few Bosnians have benefited from the programs and many are now worse off economically than they were before SFOR entered the country. And, at least partially because of international policies, few locals appear willing to put forth an effort to help the country improve.

"Few people in Bosnia have real positive feelings about the future," he said.

Bathsheba Crocker, co-director of the Post Conflict Research Project at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said the indicators aren't favorable for any economic or political turnaround soon.

"Voter turnout continues to decrease every time elections are held," she said, adding that international businesses won't invest until they have confidence in the local legal and political systems. "It's difficult to see how democracy is really working."

Mladen Pupavac, a Croat national now living in the United Kingdom, like his Bosnian neighbors to the south, lived under the benevolent dictatorship of long-time communist leader Josip Broz Tito.

He said Tito remained in power over a disparate group of people because he suppressed any nationalistic thoughts other than those to the greater state of Yugoslavia.

Pupavac said he is more skeptical than others about the long-range prospects for peace in Bosnia. While fighting isn't likely to erupt anytime soon, he said, it will come again if the international community can't figure out ways to improve the daily lives of Bosnians and get them to trust and work with each other.

"I think the fighting could erupt again and I think it would be even more vicious than between '92 and '95," he said.

Ukraine's parliament calls election invalid

Opposition demonstrators shout slogans to protest alleged fraud in the presidential elections in front of Ukrainian parliament building in Kiev.

BY YURAS KARKANAU

The Associated Press

KIEV, Ukraine — Ukraine's parliament on Saturday declared the country's disputed presidential election invalid in a symbolic vote after a week of growing street protests and allegations of vote fraud.

The action — approved by 255 of the 429 legislators present — was not legally binding, but it was a clear demonstration of rising dissatisfaction. The legislators also passed a vote of no-confidence in the Central Elections Commission.

The commission has said Russian-backed Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich won the Nov. 21 presidential election, but supporters of his Western-leaning opponent Viktor Yushchenko have streamed into the streets, claiming he was cheated out of victory.

The no-confidence vote also was non-binding but increases pressure on Yanukovich and his camp.

Negotiators from both camps were expected to meet for talks Saturday as part of a working-party established by President Leonid Kuchma in consultation with European envoys on Friday.

Ukraine's parliament has no legal capacity to directly affect the election results. But speaker Volodymyr Lytvyn said, "The most realistic political decision, taking into account the mutual claims of massive violations, is to pronounce the elections invalid."

The Central Election Commission discredited itself in the first round, undermining public trust in the institution as it is, Lytvyn said.

Outside the parliament building, more than 7,000 opposition protesters encircled the building, chanting "Yushchenko." Police stood near the building's entrances and watched.

Kuchma, the outgoing president, announced the dissolution of the working group Friday after a meeting he led with the two rivals and the delegation of European envoys.

Prospects for a resolution of the crisis by the group, made up of four people from each campaign, appeared slim.

Yushchenko told a cheering crowd that he was insisting on a new election and he would give the talks with his rival two days at most to yield results.

Iranian foreign minister says differences remain at U.N. nuclear meeting

BY GEORGE JAHN

The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Iran's foreign minister dampened hopes Saturday of a quick end to a dispute over the scope of his country's freeze on nuclear technology that can make weapons-grade uranium, suggesting Tehran remained committed to exempting key equipment from such a suspension.

The squabble over Iran's interpretation of its deal with the European Union to freeze all activities linked to uranium enrichment stalled an International Atomic Energy Agency board meeting, which was adjourned for the weekend.

That was meant to give time for the Iranian government to approve a total freeze of the program — which can produce both low-grade nuclear fuel and weapons-grade material for the core of nuclear warheads — and for delegates to decide on further steps in policing Tehran's nuclear activities.

But in Tehran, Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi told reporters that Iran still held on to its view that it had a right to exempt about 20 centrifuges from the agreement, despite contrary views from the European Union.

Iran says it wants to run the centrifuges purely for research, something Kharrazi insisted was not banned by a Nov. 7 agreement worked out with Germany, France and Britain on behalf of the European Union.

"The centrifuges will work under International Atomic Energy Agency supervision and will be for research purposes only," he told reporters.

The meeting was adjourned Friday to give time for a formal Iranian response by letter to the IAEA on whether the Tehran government accepts a full suspension that includes the 20 centrifuges.

As the board meeting awaited a formal Iranian response by letter on demands for full suspension, France, Germany and Britain dangled both a carrot and a stick.

Moving to meet Iranian demands, a confidential draft resolution, written by the European nations and made available to The Associated Press on Saturday, weakened language on how any freeze would be monitored by the agency.

But an EU official told the AP that Tehran's refusal to drop demands to exempt equipment from the enrichment suspension could prompt a much harsher resolution that could include the threat of Security Council action.

Delegates from EU countries at the meeting said that if Iran did not give in by Monday, the meeting could be adjourned and a new date set for fresh consultations on the board's plan of action — and a new resolution.

A senior EU diplomat said Kharrazi's comments appeared designed to wrest more concessions on the language of the draft but added there would be no further major changes to the text.

Anticipating that Iran would honor the Nov. 7 deal on full suspension, the original proposed resolution drafted by the three European countries already had been relatively mild, taking much of the heat off Iran after more than 1 1/2 years of IAEA scrutiny.

But Iran came to Thursday's opening day of the meeting with demands that it be allowed to operate the 20 centrifuges — which spin gas for enriching uranium.

In comments to the AP before Kharrazi spoke, senior Iranian delegate Hossein Mousavian had suggested the dispute was close to being solved, describing the demand that the centrifuges be exempted as "not an important issue for Iran."

Army deserter Jenkins sobs after release

By ERIC LAMUDGE

The Associated Press

CAMP ZAMA, Japan — Free for the first time in nearly four decades, U.S. Army deserter Charles Jenkins sobbed with joy as he was released from a military jail on Saturday after serving 25 days for abandoning his squadron and crossing the border into North Korea in 1965.

The frail 64-year-old, still in uniform and carrying a heavy duffel bag, broke down in tears after arriving at this U.S. Army base, where he was flown by Black Hawk helicopter after completing his sentence at Yokosuka Naval Base.

When asked how he felt, he told The Associated Press he was "happy," and then sobbed for several moments. "Forty years is a long time," he said.

The release ends the longest desertion case on U.S. record.

American deserters from the 1940s are still on the military's wanted list, but not one has turned himself in.

Jenkins, a native of Rich Square, N.C., testified in his Nov. 3 court-martial that he fled his Army post in South Korea on Jan. 5, 1965, because he had heard rumors that he was to be redesignated to combat in Vietnam. He said he didn't intend to stay in the North — instead, he had planned to defect to the Soviet Embassy there and eventually make his way back to the United States.

U.S. Army deserter Charles Jenkins, second right, is escorted upon arrival at Camp Zama, Japan, on Saturday. Jenkins, 64, was to join his family for several days before moving to his wife's hometown on Sado island in northern Japan. U.S. Army officials are from left: 1st Sgt. Eugene Moses, Lt. Col. Paul Nigara and Capt. David G. Watson.

The communist regime in Pyongyang, however, kept him for 39 years, along with three other American deserters.

Jenkins was joined here on Saturday by his Japanese wife and two daughters, both born in North Korea. He was expected to stay on this base just south of Tokyo for about a week while officials complete paperwork to process him out of the military, before moving to his wife's hometown on Sado island in northern Japan.

"My plan is to stay in Japan, if they will accept me," he said. "I want to go back to the United States, but only once. With my wife, I'll live in Japan, with my family."

Jenkins has said that North Korea used him as a propaganda tool in broadcasts across the Demilitarized Zone between North and South Korea and that he was forced to teach English to North Korean military officer cadets.

Two of the other three Americans have since died, but the third, James Dresnock of Richmond, Va., still lives in the North. Dresnock was a private when he crossed into North Korea in 1962.

During his court-martial, Jenkins described a harsh existence.

"We slept on the floor, there was most often no electricity and we had no running water," he testified. Jenkins said they were forced to study — in Korean — the philosophy of then-North Korean leader Kim Il Sung for 10 hours a day. If they didn't memorize enough, they were forced to study 16 hours on Sunday, their only day off. "I longed to leave that place every day," Jenkins told the court.

A turning point came in 1980, when he met and married Hitomi Soga, a Japanese woman who had been abducted by North Korean agents in 1978 to teach Japanese language and culture to its spies.

The marriage was what got Jenkins his freedom.

At an unprecedented summit in 2002 with Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi, North Korean leader Kim Jong Il admitted that his country had kidnapped Soga and several other Japanese and allowed her and the four other survivors to return home.

Jenkins initially stayed behind, but Soga's effort to reunite her family generated great sympathy in Japan. In July, Tokyo arranged for Jenkins and his two North Korea-born daughters to join Soga in Jakarta, Indonesia.

They were then flown back to Japan, ostensibly because he needed emergency medical care for an abdominal problem.

Jenkins was discharged from a Tokyo hospital on Sept. 11 and immediately turned himself in to American authorities at Camp Zama, the U.S. Army's Japan headquarters. In a plea bargain, he was sentenced to a month in prison. He was released five days early for good behavior.

"Though he is now a free man, Jenkins will still not be completely separated from the Army; until his automatic appeal process is completed, he could remain on "involuntary excess leave" status for one to two years.

"We're very happy that he's out and free," said Jenkins' brother-in-law, Lee Harrell, in Weldon, N.C. Harrell, who is married to Jenkins' younger sister Pat, said the family would welcome a visit from him to the United States.

Bush urges compromise in N. Ireland

Peace hinges on amiable negotiations between Protestants, Catholics

By SHAWN POGATCHNIK
The Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — President Bush has lent his weight to a final push for reviving power-sharing in Northern Ireland, telling the province's Protestant leader to do his best to cut a deal with longtime Catholic enemies.

Ian Paisley, whose Democratic Unionist Party represents most of Northern Ireland's British Protestant majority, received a telephone call from Bush immediately before Paisley and his senior aides began to discuss the latest draft of a confidential British-Irish blueprint for compromise.

Bush told reporters Friday at his Texas ranch that he had called Paisley to try to nudge the peace process forward.

Bush said he had sought to get the two sides "to the table to get a deal done, to close the agreement they've been working on for quite a while."

Paisley — a stridently anti-Catholic evangelist who has spent decades destroying Protestant rivals who dared compromise — said he told Bush he wanted to reach agreement with Sinn Féin, the political face of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, "but any deal must be fair."

"I reminded the president of the fact that he would not have terrorists in his government, and that we must be satisfied that IRA terrorism is over and cannot return," said Paisley, 78.

The Bush telephone diplomacy, being followed by a similar call to Sinn Féin leader Gerry Adams, was reminiscent of the investigations made by Bush's predecessor, Bill Clinton, in the hours leading up to the landmark Good Friday peace pact of 1998.

That U.S.-brokered deal has achieved or advanced dozens of goals to end a 35-year conflict over this British territory. But its core objective — sustaining a stable Catholic-Protestant administration — has proved impossible.

That could change in the next week of expected high-pressure negotiations, particularly within the ranks of both Sinn Féin and the Democratic Unionists.

Their electoral triumphs last year at the expense of moderate parties appeared to banish hopes of reviving power-sharing. But the British and Irish prime ministers, Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern, have proved unrelenting in pressing the polar opposites toward what would be a historic deal.

"This is a very crucial weekend in the peace process," said Ahern, who signed off Thursday night on a redrafted Anglo-Irish formula after a long discussion with Blair.

"I wish the parties well.

They've very big decisions," said Ahern, who noted that both Sinn Féin and the Democratic Unionists "have to call it, but the implications are enormous."

Ahern said he expected a verdict from both parties early next week, with a possible statement from the outlawed IRA to follow.

Sinn Féin leaders traveled back to Belfast from London after separate talks involving Blair and leaders of South Africa's ruling African National Congress, including former President Nelson Mandela. The South Africans have previously urged Sinn Féin to adopt a pragmatic approach during previous junctures in Northern Ireland's decade-old peace process.

Analysts agree that the deal hinges on Paisley, a figure of legendary inflexibility. They agree he could be uniquely qualified to sway a Protestant community embittered by three decades of IRA attacks and distrustful of Sinn Féin.

Letter bomb suspect

MUNICH, Germany — German police have found the burned body of a man they believe was behind a string of letter-bomb attacks in the southern state of Bavaria, officials said Saturday.

Samples of DNA taken from the body match those taken from nine letter bombs received since April by Bavarian politicians, other officials and the Polish consulate in Munich.

Garage collapse

GRETZENBACH, Switzerland — The concrete ceiling of a parking garage collapsed in a fire in northern Switzerland on Saturday, trapping seven firefighters inside, officials said.

Rescuers searched for the missing firefighters amid thick smoke still coming out of the rubble Saturday afternoon, said a spokesman for the cantonal (state) police.

The missing firefighters were part of a group of about 11 who entered the garage.

Climbers still missing

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Nicaraguan officials said late Friday that they're still unsure what's become of an American and a Briton who disappeared 10 days ago while attempting to climb a volcano.

The army said Friday morning that Jordan Alexander Rees, 23, of San Diego, and Nicholas Roth, 28, of Great Britain had been spotted during a air search over the jungle.

But later, the head of the army's public relations department backtracked on that information, saying he couldn't confirm that the two had been seen.

Relics returned

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II, seeking to heal rifts with other Christians, on Saturday handed over the relics of two Orthodox saints that were brought to Rome from ancient Constantinople centuries ago.

The pope sat beside Ecumenical patriarch Bartholomew I, spiritual leader of the world's Orthodox Christians, in St. Peter's Basilica as the bones of the saints were brought to the altar. The two religious leaders blessed the relics before the reliquaries were carried away by Vatican ushers for return later in the day to Istanbul, Turkey.

New political party

LONDON — Actress Vanessa Redgrave and her brother, political activist Corin Redgrave, on Saturday launched a political party devoted to human rights, called the Peace and Progress Party.

The party, co-designed with Azmat Beggs, the founder of a Guantanamo Bay detainee says it will field candidates and endorse politicians with strong human rights records in the next general election.

Party organizers will set an official agenda for the group in early spring and will choose candidates then, Redgrave said.

Mother turns in son accused of slashing students

By JOE McDONALD

The Associated Press

People gather at the gate of Ruzhou No. 2 High School in Ruzhou, China, on Friday following a deadly knife attack that killed at least eight students.

BELING — The mother of a 21-year-old man accused of slashing as many as nine boys to death as they slept in their high school dormitory turned her son in after he attempted to commit suicide, a news report said.

Yan Yanning, 21, was reported to police after he attempted to take his life late Thursday in the city of Ruzhou, the Xinhua News Agency said on Saturday. The agency said Yan confessed and said he slashed the students out of hatred.

Xinhua put the death toll in the attack at eight, but another state-run news agency, the China News Service, said nine students were killed.

Yan broke into the central China dormitory at 11:45 p.m. on Thursday and "chopped eight people to death," Xinhua said. The China News Service cited a survivor as saying that during the attack, the man with the knife said, "Don't blame me."

That was the fourth knife attack reported at a Chinese school or day care center in as many months. The earlier assaults left one child dead and 42 people injured.

The state of violence prompted the government of President Hu Jintao to issue a nationwide order in September for schools to hire guards and tighten security.

The reason for the surge in knife attacks isn't clear. They have taken place in areas throughout China and involve attackers from different backgrounds. In the only other fatal case until this week, an attacker at a Beijing kindergarten was reported to be an employee of the school who had a history of mental illness.

But China's cities and towns seethe with grudges and personal feuds amid wrenching economic and social change.

Fatal bombings, mass poisonings and other attacks are reported frequently, usually blamed on people trying to turn business rivals or seeking revenge in often bitter disputes. Firearms are rarely used because private gun ownership is illegal in most parts of China.

Last month, six men were arrested in Beijing in a knife attack at an Internet cafe that left 14 people bloodied. News reports said the attackers wanted revenge on several men they had met at the cafe and when they couldn't be found, slashed customers at random.

Ruzhou, a city of 920,000 people, is located about 450 miles southwest of Beijing in Henan province, southwest of the giant industrial city of Zhengzhou. The city government Web site says coal mining is a major industry.

Wis. community grieves for slain hunters

Palbearers carry the casket of Mark Roidt out of Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic Church in Dodge, Wis., following his funeral Friday. Roidt's funeral was the first for six deer hunters shot and killed in northwestern Wisconsin on Sunday.

Family, friends begin attending funerals for victims

BY JENNY PRICE

The Associated Press

RIKE LAKE, Wis. — Orange ribbons are tied around the lamp posts on Main Street. Tiny ones flutter from car antennas. A few are stuck on business signs.

The slaying of six hunters has saddened virtually this entire community of 8,500. Already one has been laid to rest. Three more were to be buried Saturday, the other two on Monday.

"There's nobody that's not touched in town," said Bob Stanonik, who stood on Main Street as 100 to 200 people gathered Friday to remember Mark Roidt, 28.

Chai Vang, of St. Paul, is accused of fatally shooting the hunters when they confronted him about trespassing on land owned by two of the victims. He also faces charges for wounding two others.

Vang, a Hmong immigrant, told authorities the hunters surrounded him and used racial slurs before one fired a shot at him. One of the survivors said Vang started shooting first.

Many of the mourners Friday wore orange ribbons on their coats.

Jodi Anderson knew Roidt because he often ate at the restaurant where she is a cook. She, like others in the community, still can't believe the hunters are gone.

"I'm very angry," Anderson said. "This is so wrong."

Roidt's mother, Karen Roidt, told mourners that her son died doing something he loved, according to family friend Pat Malesa.

The funeral was closed to reporters.

The funerals scheduled Saturday were for Al Laski, 43; Robert Crotteau, 42, the owner of the land where the shooting happened; and his son, Joey Crotteau, 20. Jessica Willers, 27, and Denny Drew, 55, will be remembered Monday. Willers' father, Terry Willers, and Lauren Hesebeck were wounded. Both have been released from the hospital.

The deer hunting season, which ended Sunday night, is considered a holiday by many in the area.

"The hunting week up here is called holy week," Stanonik said.

"Families get together, father, son, grandson," Burrell Hanson, who employed Roidt for a few months doing some carpentry work, said the town needs time to heal.

Some hunters didn't return to the woods after the shootings, he said.

Oren Edahl of Rice Lake doesn't think the shootings will keep people from the hobby they love.

"We all are saddened, but things will go on," he said.

Associated Press writer Xiao Zhang contributed to this story from Rice Lake.

Bush asks Americans to help those in need

The Associated Press

CRAWFORD, Texas — President Bush issued a holiday-season call on Americans to volunteer and give to charity — "to share our blessings with the least among us."

He singled out for special praise those who have given time and energy to U.S. troops stationed around the world.

"The greatest challenges of our time have come to the men and women who protect our nation," Bush said in his weekly radio address Saturday.

"Like generations before them, today's armed forces have liberated captive peoples and shown compassion for the suffering and delivered hope to the oppressed," Bush said.

"In the past year, they have fought the terrorists abroad so that we do not have to face those enemies here at home."

Bush said there was much to appreciate this Thanksgiving weekend. "We're grateful for our beautiful country, and for the prosperity we enjoy. We're grateful for the chance to live, work and worship in freedom," Bush said.

"We also recognize our duty to share our blessings with the least among us," the president said.

"Throughout the holiday season, schools, churches, synagogues and other generous organizations gather food and clothing for their neighbors in need."

Many young people give part of their holiday to volunteer at homeless shelters or food pantries.

"On Thanksgiving, and on every day of the year, America is a more hopeful nation because of the volunteers who serve the weak and the vulnerable."

U.S. updates Mideast terror threat warning

WASHINGTON — The State Department said Friday the death of Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and upcoming elections to determine his successor may create conditions that would affect the security of American citizens.

A department travel warning said that during the 40-day traditional period of mourning, large, unpredictable crowds may gather for prayers at sites in the Old City of Jerusalem as well as at local mosques throughout Israel, the West Bank and Gaza.

"Both before and after Palestinian Authority elections, the possibility of mass demonstrations and unrest will continue to exist," it said.

The warning was an update of previous advisories that urged Americans to depart Gaza immediately and to defer travel to Israel, the West Bank and Gaza because of the security situation.

Son's Iraq tour shapes lawmaker's opposition

Rep. Duncan Hunter opposes intelligence reform bill that could strip authority from Defense Department

BY KEN GUGGENHEIM

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rep. Duncan Hunter says his son, a Marine artillery officer who has served in Iraq, asked him for two favors. One was to fix his Ford Bronco. The other was to stand firm in opposing an intelligence bill that would strip authority from the Pentagon.

Hunter didn't repair the Bronco. But he came through on the intelligence bill — a key reason that a compromise favored by President Bush, top congressional leaders and the Sept. 11 commission fell apart.

To his critics, Hunter, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, has been the Pentagon's tool, undermining bipartisan efforts to make urgently needed intelligence reforms in an effort to protect the Defense Department's turf.

But Hunter insists he isn't protecting turf. He says he's trying to protect the lives of troops, including his 27-year-old son, 1st Lt. Duncan Duane Hunter, who has served two tours in Iraq. The lawmaker believes that shifting responsibility for satellite images and other intelligence now handled by the Pentagon could ultimately endanger troops.

In an interview, Hunter said his son and other soldiers who have fought in Iraq and Afghanistan told him of the importance those images play in combat.

"My son was able to do things with intelligence in his artillery operations that my father, who was a World War II Marine artillery officer in the south Pacific, was never able to do," said Hunter, R-Calif.

Hunter's concerns have been echoed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman, Gen. Richard Myers. But lawmakers who supported the compromise say it would have ensured that troops receive timely intelligence. Some are skeptical of Hunter's motives.

Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., said he believes Hunter "would oppose the bill no matter what argument he had to use to kill it."

"I believe this is primarily an issue of turf," Shays said in an interview.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, the top Democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee, said in a statement that "cynical House Republicans" never had any intention of reaching a deal.

The other main opponent of the compromise, House Judiciary Committee Chairman James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., has said such comments will only make it harder to pass an intelligence reform bill.

Hunter shrugged off both criticism and White House pressure. Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney have called Hunter to seek his support.

"You don't ever get a sense that he feels that pressure," said retired Marine Corps Gen. Terry L. Paul, a friend of Hunter's.

"Once he formulates an opinion on something, he's steadfast in it."

Paul said he learned that about a dozen years ago, before becoming friends with Hunter. Paul was in the office of Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, a future defense secretary, who was out negotiating a military issue with Hunter.

He said Cohen walked into his office and "threw down his papers on the floor in a display of frustration" and said jokingly, "If I had a gun, I don't know who I'd shoot first, me or Duncan Hunter."

Hunter, 56, is a burly, affable and sometimes disheveled Vietnam veteran who, true to his name, is a passionate hunter.

Military issues have dominated his 24 years in Congress. He became Armed Services Committee chairman two years ago, yet despite the powerful position, remains little known outside of military circles and his San Diego County district.

Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., right, seen with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, center, and Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Peter Pace, confirmed his opposition to the Sept. 11 Bill on Nov. 22 and echoed Pentagon concerns that the realignment of intelligence authority could interfere with the military chain of command and endanger troops in the field.

He is a conservative who has favored increasing defense spending, cutting bureaucracy and strengthening the defense industrial base. He strongly supports the war in Iraq.

Hunter defended Donald Rumsfeld when the defense secretary was under fire because of the Iraq prison abuse scandal. He not only rejected Democratic reprimands but he publicly criticized his Senate counterpart and fellow Republican, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, for doing so. Warner's insistence on holding numerous public hearings to get to the bottom of the scandal had been receiving bipartisan praise.

"I think the Senate has become mesmerized by cameras and I think that's sad," Hunter said then.

But Hunter has, at times, defied the administration. Last year, a $400.5 billion defense bill was held up because of Hunter's insistence that it strengthen rules requiring the Pentagon to give preference to American suppliers. The final wording was weaker than what Hunter had sought, but for months, he resisted pressure from Warner and the administration.

ACLU: U.S. opposed security measures for new passports

BY LESLIE MILLER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration opposed security measures for new microchip-equipped passports that privacy advocates contended were needed to prevent identity theft, government snooping or a terror attack, according to State Department documents released Friday.

The passports, scheduled to be issued by the end of 2005, could be read electronically from as far away as 30 feet, according to the American Civil Liberties Union, which obtained the documents under a Freedom of Information Act request.

Though the passports wouldn't include transmitters of their own, they would have antennas to allow a reader to capture the data.

The ability to read remotely, or "skim," personal data raises the possibility that passport holders would be vulnerable to identity theft, the ACLU said. It also would allow government agents to find out covertly who was attending a political meeting or make it easier for terrorists to target Americans traveling abroad, the ACLU said.

Frank Moss, deputy assistant secretary of state for passport services, said the United States wants to ensure the safety and security of Americans traveling abroad.

"We are still hard at work at ensuring the security and integrity of the data on the chip," Moss said.

He said, however, encrypting the data might make it more difficult for other countries to read the passports.

"It flies in the face of global interoperability," Moss said. In a memo drafted in August 2003, Moss dismissed objections that information could be copied remotely.

"There is little risk here since we plan to store only currently collected data with a facial image," he wrote. "The U.S. will recommend against the use of PINs (personal identification numbers) or other methods that might be required to unlock a chip for reading."

Moss said in a telephone interview on Friday that the passport data does not need to be encrypted because it does not include fingerprints. Stealing fingerprint data might allow unauthorized access to automatic teller machines or secure computer networks.

Hackers turning sights on cellular phones

BY YUKI NOGUCHI
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Early this month, several Web sites began offering software promising ring tones and screensavers for certain cell phones.

But those who downloaded the software found that it turned every icon on their cell phones' screens into a skull and crossbones and disabled their phones, so they could no longer send or receive text messages or access contact lists or calendars.

Security experts dubbed the virus "Skulls" and consider it an early warning from hackers of the damage they could do as they turn their malevolent talents from computers to cell phones.

"Hackers are simply trying to put out there that it can be done," said Vincent Weaver, senior director of security response for Symantec, a security software firm. "The motivation is to say [cell phones] aren't as secure as you think."

Mobile phones are a tempting target because they have become so much a part of everyday life. In addition, consumers are buying "smart phones" with Internet connections that provide an easier pathway for cell-phone infections. Few phones now in use come equipped with anti-virus protection, although some companies are starting to install it. Most cell phone users aren't on guard for viral infections like those that periodically bring down computers worldwide, and, at this point, there is little they can do to protect themselves.

"The impact is potentially larger on the phone because we're not savvy about that," said Victor Kuznetsov, senior vice president of mobile solutions at McAfee, a security software firm. "Also, the profile of a mobile society is a cross-section of society who are potentially less (technically) savvy than computer users."

Skulls is one of five cell phone viruses identified this year, according to security experts and analysts.

The scale of such attacks is hard to quantify because the federally funded CERT Coordination Center at Carnegie Mellon University, which monitors viruses and worms on the Internet, does not separately tally reports of cell-phone viruses.

But there are anecdotal reports. For instance, in Japan, cell phones have frequently been "spammed" with junk messages, some of which redirect phones to Web sites that cause the phones to crash.

Most basic phones can send and receive text messages, which makes them vulnerable to some attacks. And new ways of using cell phones encourage the spread of viruses. For instance, cell phones can transfer infections when users participate in a dating service that allows them to contact strangers in the same room via text messages or play online games.

Furthermore, existing anti-virus software for computers hasn't been programmed for cell phones.

The cell-phone attack known as "Skulls" affects text messages and contact lists. It is one of five malicious software programs attacking cell phones this year.

"By 2006, cell phone viruses will be what viruses are on the Internet in 2004," because cell phones are, in many ways, becoming more like miniature PCs, said John Pescatore, an analyst with Gartner, a technology research firm. "First it will be a nuisance. The next phase will be crime, like theft or theft of service, and then, after that, we'll start seeing different types of attacks" that bring down networks, he said.

Cell phones use a number of different operating systems, meaning hackers must design separate programs to disable each one. That makes it harder to design a mass attack. "It's never going to be as uniform a landscape for hackers," so it's not clear how broad an attack might be, said John Jackson, an analyst with the Yankee Group.

Still, concerns are growing because of the growth in the usage of cell phones. There are 170 million cell phones in use compared to fewer than 116 million personal computers, according to the trade group CTIA — The Wireless Association and market-research firm IDC.

Experts have tried to anticipate how big a problem viruses might be by simulating attacks on cell phones in software labs. They have found e-mail viruses can multiply on their own by sending messages through a cell phone's address book. Viruses can allow hackers into a phone to access passwords or corporate data stored on the device. And they can be used to manipulate the phone to make calls or send messages at the phone owner's expense.

"The nightmare scenario with cell phones is a virus that would delete the contents of your phone, or start calling (a toll number) on its own from the phone or recording every single one of your conversations and sending the recorded conversation somewhere," said Mikko Hypponen, director of anti-virus research at F-Secure Corp., a Finnish security firm.

Number of exchange students decreasing

BY DAVID B. CARUSO
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — High school foreign exchange students became such a part of American culture in the 1980s and '90s that, for a while, no Hollywood teen movie was complete without one.

But the number of international students at U.S. high schools has dropped significantly in the last decade, partly because schools and families are less willing to play host.

"We don't really have a lot of research into why it is happening, but it is happening. There are fewer students," said John Hishmeh, executive director of an umbrella group for most of the country's big exchange programs.

Some of the decline may be due to visa rules that took effect in the late 1990s that made it more difficult for international students to attend U.S. public schools, he said. Security and political concerns may have played a role too, although the downturn appears to have begun before the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Hishmeh said it might be more likely that, with the end of the Cold War, busy American families and cash-strapped school districts simply became less interested in hosting foreigners.

"We see a lot of schools not wanting to take foreign students because of budget concerns. We see a harder time for programs trying to find host parents," Hishmeh said. "Funding for public diplomacy and interest in public diplomacy really started to drop off in the late 1990s. We need to get back in the game of telling America's story."

Last year, 27,742 foreign exchange students visited the United States through programs accredited by the Council on Standards for International Educational Travel, the organization Hishmeh leads.

The numbers were 44,291 in the 1999-2000 school year and 62,005 in 1993-94.

The State Department has noticed a recent downturn in enrollments too, although for a shorter time.

About 39,000 foreign secondary students were admitted to the United States on exchange programs in the 1999-2000 school year, compared with 28,200 the year of the terrorist attacks and 24,600 in 2002-2003, according to the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. Unlike the figures from the Council on Standards, those numbers don't include students who come for less than a full semester.

Born in the wake of World War II, high school exchange programs have long helped showroads where the United States was trying to build a better relationship.

Christina Pilot, of State College, is hosting Chartharham Chareonwong, a 16-year-old from Thailand. She sees her participation in a Rotary International program as a way to help bolster America's image abroad.

"I'm doing my own small part in worldwide detente," she said.

Seven of the 10 places that sent the most students to study in American high schools last year were countries that either fought the United States in a war or were a battleground for U.S. troops: Germany, Japan, South Korea, Vietnam, France, Italy and China. An eighth was Cold War opponent Russia.

The State Department looked to expand on that tradition in 2003 by founding a $10 million program aimed at encouraging student exchanges with Muslim countries.

About 160 students from the Middle East, North Africa and South Asia attended U.S. high schools in the program's first year. This year, enrollment increased to more than 400. Eventually the State Department hopes to expand to 1,000 students.

The challenge may be finding enough American schools and families willing to play host.

Utah passed a law last year slashing money for exchange programs and requiring visiting students to pay tuition to attend local high schools unless they came in a one-for-one swap for an American.

Christina and Howard Pilot, left, help their son, Carl, and Chartharham Chareonwong, right, with their homework in their State College, Pa., home Wednesday night. Chartharham is an exchange student from Thailand. The number of international students at U.S. high schools has dropped significantly in the last decade, partly because schools and families are less willing to play host.

AP

In recent years, some Pennsylvania high schools have hesitated to take exchange students, partly because they are more costly — that federal education regulations required them to place students with less-than-perfect English in costly special education programs, according to Jim Buckheit, executive director of the state Board of Education.

School officials in New Brighton, Pa., about 25 miles northwest of Pittsburgh, are considering a plan to accept only one or two exchange students instead of their usual four or five. The reason is cost, Superintendent John Osheka said.

"They are wonderful, delightful people to have here," he said, "but we want to make sure our services are not stretched."

Sticky start to shopping season in Louisiana

The Associated Press

LAFAYETTE, La. — The busiest shopping day of the year turned out to be a sticky affair.

Vandals apparently glued the locks on dozens of Lafayette's biggest retailers, preventing managers from opening up promptly on lucrative "Black Friday." Hundreds of shoppers, some of whom arrived before dawn, were forced to wait outside Barnes & Noble,

Vandals glue locks at several retail stores causing 'Black Friday' disruption

Old Navy and other stores while managers summoned locksmiths.

At least 200 locks on dozens of businesses were glued, including main entrances, rear doors and employee entrances, locksmiths said. Wilson said. Wilson's first job at about 5 a.m. Friday was to make his way to the front door lock at Old Navy — by pushing through about 500 shoppers waiting outside.

"I found about a half a tube of glue stuck inside," he said.

Kevin Vizona, head locksmith for Pop-A-Lock in Lafayette, said the vandals squirted the glue deep inside the keyholes, forcing him to drill holes and remove the locks from the doors.

"We've never run into a day that's been quite so busy with these particular problems," Vizona said.

Chuck Trenchard, an employee of S&K Menswear, said the prank had cost his store more than $1,000 in business, because potential customers had arrived early, then took off because they couldn't get inside.

Most of the stores had their doors open for customers by mid-morning, Vizona said.

Police said they had no suspects but were investigating the vandalism as cases of possible criminal mischief or intentional damage to property, both misdemeanors.

Man jumps to his death

NEW YORK — A man jumped to his death Friday from the 86th-floor observation deck at the Empire State Building, one of Manhattan's busiest tourist destinations, police said.

The apparent suicide forced police to briefly close the landmark on Fifth Avenue to tourists in New York for the holiday weekend.

The man apparently climbed over a security fence that encloses the observation deck before leaping off. He hit a landing on the sixth floor, where he died instantly, police said.

No identification was found on his body.

At least 31 other people have committed suicide at the Empire State Building since it opened in 1931.

Missing passenger

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — A 54-year-old passenger vanished as a ship returned from a five-day cruise to the Bahamas, and a day-long ocean search turned up no sign of him Friday.

Glenn Sheridan, from Williamsburg, Va., was reported missing by his wife Thursday, after the Carnival Cruise Line ship Celebration docked in Jacksonville.

The ship's electronic exit and entry program showed he had not left the vessel after the arrival, and a crew search of the boat came up empty, Carnival said.

Gloria Sheridan said she had last seen her husband about 1:30 a.m. Thursday. She said he was an early riser and might have fallen overboard as early as 4 a.m., said Coast Guard Petty Officer Bobby Nash.

Nash said the ship then would have been about 13 miles off northeastern Florida. A boat and helicopter scoured 350 square miles of ocean and the St. Johns River. The search was suspended Friday.

Woman sues college

ROME, Ga. — A college student filed a lawsuit accusing the school of failing to protect her from a former student who allegedly stalked, assaulted and repeatedly raped her.

The woman said the school received repeated complaints of attacks by the man but did nothing about it.

The woman filed the lawsuit Tuesday against Berry College and Marcus Sadelowsky, who has transferred to another school. He has not been charged, and denied the allegations when confronted by college officials last spring.

Tragic death

FL ST. PETERSBURG — Edna Buice had a stroke a few weeks ago, but she was doing so well that her children thought she might be home for Thanksgiving.

Those hopes ended Nov. 7 when the 82-year-old died in a bizarre accident at Bayfront Medical Center.

A padded belt restraint was fastened around Buice's waist, meant to keep her upright in the wheelchair because the stroke had paralyzed her right side.

Buice somehow slipped under the restraint while left unattended. A nurse found her sitting on the floor in front of the wheelchair with the restraint caught around her neck.

The nurse tried CPR, but it was too late, said police Sgt. Mike Puetz.

"My mom was one of the sweetest, kindest, most godly women I have ever known in my entire life," said Lou Ballenger, one of Buice's four children. "She wanted to live very much. She was improving. And then this horrible, horrible tragedy."

Harassment settlement

NJ NEWARK — A jury awarded $2.8 million to a former sheriff's officer who said she suffered sexual harassment from other officers because she's a lesbian. Karen Caggiano, 43, testified she had to use the same bathroom and locker room as male officers, and that pictures of naked women were posted on lockers.

Her lawyers also say one officer repeatedly exposed himself. The lawyer for the county said the department responded thoroughly to Caggiano's complaints.

Bicyclist killed in crash

FL TAMPA — A sheriff's deputy struck and killed a bicyclist as the man pedaled home from a convenience store along a dark road.

Hillsborough County sheriff's spokesman Lt. Rod Reder said Deputy Steve Figueroa, 34, a first-year member of the force, was on patrol in a cruiser that night.

A bicyclist veered in front of him in an attempt to cross the road. Reder said. The deputy swerved but ended up striking the bicycle, sending the man flying to the side of the road. A pickup then hit the bicycle again, tossing it across the road.

Several family members at the scene said the bicyclist was Ronald Seger, 43, who lived near the crash site. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

Study on asthma risk

NY BUFFALO — Researchers from the University at Buffalo have found another reason to be concerned over traffic backups at the U.S.-Canadian border: People living near the crossings, which are prone to commercial truck backups, appear to be at greater risk of developing asthma. Researchers say their study conducted at Buffalo's Peace Bridge has implications for all busy border crossings.

Death debt mystery

AR HARRISON — Authorities are searching for a man accused of avoiding a debt by faking his own death. Terry Presnell, a former small newspaper publisher, allegedly sent a phony death certificate to a printing business to which he owed $1,857. The document said Presnell died in a traffic accident in Mexico.

Town sues to use 'Jesus'

SC GREAT FALLS — The Town Council voted 6-1 to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to overturn lower court rulings that prevent it from using Jesus Christ's name in prayers at meetings. Both a U.S. District judge and a federal appeals court agreed council members cannot refer to a specific deity in prayers at meetings. The original lawsuit was filed in 2001 by Darla Wynne, a Wiccan high priestess.

Movie pirate nabbed

a hearing Monday, said John Malcolm, MPA's director of worldwide anti-piracy operations.

Leong ran the Web site film88.com and a company called MasterSurf Inc., which set up computer servers overseas to protect the business from liability, Malcolm said Tuesday.

The MPA said Leong previously ran a similar Web site, movie88.com, which was shut down by officials in Taiwan. Dutch courts also shut down servers he later set up in Iran and the Netherlands, the MPA said.

Monkey gets new home

HI HONOLULU — A monkey seized from a raid on a Makiki home last month will have a new home at a Big Island zoo, while state agriculture officials have dismissed a complaint about three other monkeys kept in a display at a nightclub.

The two-year-old squirrel monkey seized by state officials had been part of an aquarium-style display at the Blue Tropic Restaurant and Nightclub before owner Darren Tsuchiya sold it. But the man who bought the monkey didn't have a state permit or bond to own a restricted animal, and he was cited and fined $1,000.

Tsuchiya was cited and fined $200 for failing to comply with bond conditions required for possessing a nonhuman primate.

Man drops business plan

IL ANTIOCH — A businessman has given up plans to open a coffee shop that angered residents with its name.

Tony Liotta had signed up to open a Bad Ass Coffee franchise in the northern Illinois community of Antioch and argued that the chain takes its name from the donkeys used to haul beans in Hawaii.

But Antioch residents weren't convinced, and the village board earlier this month passed a resolution that condemned the name as "repugnant to the entire concept of family values."

Now, Liotta has canceled plans to open the store, citing personal reasons.

Bad Ass Coffee is based in Salt Lake City. Executive Harold Hill called Liotta's decision disappointing and said the chain will try to find a new owner for the Antioch shop.

Lawsuit dismissed

PA ALLENTOWN — A lawsuit against the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation arguing that it was responsible for the death of a Berks County woman killed by a chunk of ice thrown from an overpass has been dismissed.

Elaine Cowell, 33, was killed in January 2003 when a 15-year-old boy threw the ice off a bridge near Allentown. The ice crashed through the windshield of a van in which Cowell was riding, killing her.

The lawsuit argued that PennDOT was negligent because it had not installed a fence on the overpass to prevent people from throwing objects onto the highway. A fence was installed there after Cowell's death.

NE KEARNEY — Amy Springer really loves her husband, Marine Lance Cpl. Brett Springer. She's married him twice in the last 12 months.

The Springers had planned a November 2004 ceremony but found themselves tying the knot at the courthouse a whole year before Brett was shipped out to Iraq. They said their "I do's" again Friday, the date they had originally picked for their wedding. This time, though, the setting was First United Methodist Church in Kearney.

"We were already planning this [Friday's] wedding when we found out he was leaving," said Amy, 23. "So we just decided it would be easier to get married before he left again."

Amy's father, 52-year-old Mike Oliver, couldn't be at the church ceremony because he is in Kuwait with the Nebraska Army National Guard's 107th Medium Truck Company.

"It was either do it while he [Brett] was here or do it while my dad was here," Amy said.

Brett, 28, is scheduled to return to Iraq in February.

Family's birthday bond

FL BELLEVUE — It's hard to forget a birthday in the Dover family — everyone was born on Nov. 26.

One Friday, Kimberly Dover turned 31, husband Billy turned 35 and their twins, Angelica and Derrick, celebrated their first birthday.

The parents said they were surprised to have any children, let alone two on their birthday. After years of infertility, they were about to give up when one last treatment proved effective.

The proud parents are looking forward to more birthdays.

"I can't wait till they go to Walt Disney World," Kimberly said.

Ceiling crash

IL SPRINGFIELD — At least four people were injured when netting across the open atrium of a six-story government building collapsed and tore down sections that crashed through the ceiling of a room below.

The netting was weighed down by snow and ice, the result of a storm that blanketed the Midwest on Wednesday.

The falling stone left a gash about 60 feet long in the atrium's floor, said Dave DeFraties, chief of operations for the Springfield Fire Department.

Officials said four people were taken to a hospital with injuries ranging from scrapes to a head laceration. The injuries did not appear to be life-threatening.

Those cats can travel

NC CHARLOTTE — Wild Thing, Georgia, Sparky and Boots aren't very old, but they sure get around.

The feline foursome arrived with a parts shipment that Twin-Star Construction in Charlotte had ordered from Georgia. The kittens somehow found their way into the box and survived without food or water.

The kittens were so young that they hadn't opened their eyes, said Cathy Thomas, who works for the construction company. She took them home and began feeding them with an eyedropper; her twin sons picked the names.

Each cat requires a 2-ounce bottle every three hours.

Disastrous survey

KY LEXINGTON — An automated phone survey on disaster preparedness turned into its own mini-disaster.

The survey was designed to run from 4 to 9 p.m. last Monday and Tuesday. Instead, a malfunction Monday night caused the computerized calling program to dial numbers until 4 or 5 a.m. Tuesday.

Patricia Dugger, who heads the city's emergency management division, apologized for the error but noted most residents haven't complained — they just said they were too sleepy to do the survey.

Avtec, a Minneapolis-based firm that developed the calling system, is trying to determine what went awry.

City to repeal Indian law

MA BOSTON — Mayor Tom Menino took the first step toward repealing a 329-year-old law that orders the arrest of all American Indians who enter the city.

The law has not been enforced for centuries, but tribes have been trying to win a repeal for years.

The City Council passed a resolution in favor of repeal last year; the final action must be taken by the Legislature. Menino filed a petition to set the legislative process in motion.

"It's time to make things right," he said in a statement the day before Thanksgiving.

The colonial Legislature approved the statute Oct. 13, 1675, during King Philip's War, one of the bloodiest conflicts in American history — a series of guerrilla battles between British colonists and tribes.

Volunteer arrested

TX HOUSTON — A Special Olympics volunteer with a suburban Houston school district has been arrested on charges that he sexually assaulted developmentally disabled teenage boys.

Richard Craig Hopper, 39, was charged with four counts of sexual assault of a child after his Monday arrest. He was in the Harris County Jail in Houston late Tuesday on bonds totaling $400,000, officials said.

Hopper, a former substitute teacher for the Galena Park Independent School District, is scheduled to appear in court Wednesday.

Injection results in death

WA SEATTLE — A woman who underwent surgery for a brain aneurysm died after she was mistakenly injected with an antiseptic solution instead of a harmless X-ray marker dye, hospital officials say.

Mary McClinion, 69, had the operation Nov. 4 at Virginia Mason Medical Center and died Tuesday.

At the end of McClinion's operation, a technician was supposed to inject the dye into a leg artery. Instead, the syringe was filled with chlorhexidine, a highly toxic solution used to clean the skin, hospital quality chief Dr. Robert Caplan said.

Sunday Horoscope

It's a lazy morning, and energy is scattered, but that's not to say all those fragmented strands of effort aren't going to good use. We're not always lucky enough to see the results of our actions until much, much later in our lives. But you can be sure that every activity matters. Handle correspondence and finances this evening.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY

(November 28). Love lights your way this year; a promise is fulfilled in the next four weeks. Consolidate your resources, and prepare for big changes. An entrepreneurial project is featured in December. Friendly people start to take notice. Your love life is a hot item in January. You must make a choice that affects how you'll spend the rest of the year.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). A charming infant terrible, you're an indispensable part of your group. In for you, everyone would keep marching to the drum of perfect, boring stasis. If you're accused of being a troublemaker, grin, and say, "That's me."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Your penetrating sincerity will pierce the bubble of a problem, deflating it over the course of the next few days. This power can also be used to conquer your lingering anxieties about events on the horizon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). This is not a status quo kind of day, unless, of course, you're determined to settle for it. Challenge yourself. What would make you want to sing a song of praise or emote a triumphant shout?

CANCER (June 22-July 22). An aloof approach to love works today. Being clingy is trying anything. Spend time with a romantic interest because you want to, not because you need to. Ask to be delivered from a battle that was never yours to fight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). It's natural for you to use your courage to protect others or further a cause you believe in but do not originate. Believe in your own worthiness. It may as well be you! Advance, and achieve — retreat, and watch someone else achieve.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22).

You don't need a formal ritual to divorce yourself from a part of your life that has become untenable. Let it go the way you discharge any other heavy burden — open your heart, and drop it where you stand.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23).

Having a day off is an opportunity for proactive thinking and planning. Action taken on an administrative level is the way to good fortune, but it's not going to happen unless you write it down on your calendar and really do it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21).

You know better than to act for a reason to reach out. Your self-esteem is anything but fragile now. You can bare your soul with no fear of how others will react (since it will have zero effect on the way you see yourself).

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21).

With only 10 percent more compassion for yourself, you will understand what motivates you. With 10 percent more compassion for others, you'll know their intentions and accept their gifts as loving gestures.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19).

If you take things literally, you'll be frustrated. The day is ripe with complexity, symbolism and hidden meaning. Look deeply into some other, beyond what can be captured on video and into the story behind the story.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18).

Conflict is scary, not just for you but for many — OK, it's scarier for you. Though you're not out to hurt feelings, into every relationship a little confrontation must fall — otherwise, someone is not being real.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20).

You define friendship in broad terms and are therefore able to love more friends. Embrace those fearful, imperfect human beings you've chosen to make a part of your world.

Biting through the pain

Where does the phrase "bite the bullet" come from? My guess is the military, though why anyone would actually bite a bullet is beyond me.

You are half right in supposing that "bite the bullet" (and the earlier "bite on the bullet") comes from the military. The phrase originated in military medical practices of the 19th century.

During the American Civil War, unsanitary conditions and poorly trained field surgeons were just two reasons that amputation was the most commonly performed operation for a wounded or gangrenous arm or leg. In the days before antiseptics, it was easier to remove the infected part than to stop the infection.

But the field surgeons didn't have anesthesia, either — perhaps just a bit of whiskey, as in old westerns. To help the patient endure the pain of amputation, they would give him a bullet or some other hard object to bite down on in much the way you might clench your fist while enduring a painful injection or tooth extraction.

New approach may be needed to motivate unresponsive son

Dear Abby: My 9-year-old stepson, "Bryan," is turning into a feminine little boy. He has been into all about girly products and what is on sale at the mall. Bryan's mother treats him like a baby. All they do at their house is sit around and watch TV. She has no friends, and neither does Bryan. He does not get involved with anything, he is exactly like his mother.

When Bryan is at our house, we try to get him involved in activities, but the boy is lazy and doesn't want to participate. Then he tells his mother that his father yells at him. My husband does yell, but only to get Bryan off his butt to do something. The result is Bryan wants to spend very little time with us because of his mother's constant baying.

At our house, he has chores and we make him help with things.

At her house, she does everything for him. How can we make Bryan less feminine and involve him with friends and activities?

— "Wicked" Stepmom in Pennsylvania

Dear Stepmom: It's a parent's job to help a child be the best that he (or she) can be. That does not mean the father remaking the child in his own image, and that may be what the boy is resisting. Bryan is not particularly "masculine," and he's not interested in what you and your husband are trying to force him into. Your insistence on trying to make him fit your mold may be what is driving him away.

Instead of yelling at him to get him "off his butt," if you need his help with chores, say exactly that. ("Bryan, I need your help with something.") And since he isn't interested in the usual "boy things," perhaps it's time you and your husband expose the boy to art, music, dance, to see what does turn him on.

If none of the above does the trick, then some professional counseling for the three of you to establish a healthier level of communication is in order. You may be able to help Bryan become social, but don't count on changing the core of who he is.

Dear Abby: My wedding is scheduled for the fall of next year. My parents are paying for the wedding. My groom is my grandmother. She has never shown any interest in me and doesn't know me from a hole in the wall. She has been verbally abusive to my father throughout his entire life. She even told him once that he was a "mistake" and she didn't want to have him.

I do not want this woman at my wedding, but I know my father wants her there. My dad feels that since I am her only granddaughter, she should be present. I have nothing but anger toward her because of the way she has treated my father and her indifference toward me.

Who should decide whether the mean old bag will attend? Since my parents are paying, does my father get the final say? Oh, did I mention that my mother does not want Granny there, either? How should this be handled?

—Hates Grannies in Maryland

Dear H.G.: My advice is to be a lady and be gracious.

Your father has his reasons for wanting his mother to come to the wedding. Please find it in your heart to grant his wish without giving him further heart-burn. On your wedding day, you will be so busy with your wedding party and your husband, you'll hardly even know the woman is there.

Husband should tell chronic flirt that it's time to back off

Dear Annie: My 50-year-old husband has fallen victim to a flirt.

"Georgia" is 20 years younger and a member of our wine-tasting group. She follows my husband around every move he makes. She is friendly, flirts herself to his side, laughing, touching and hugging him. I once caught her showing him a picture of the two of them that she keeps in her wallet. (It was a group shot, and she cut out all the others.) Georgia often tells my husband that he's good-looking and what a cute couple they'd make. But he's only to get personal information about my husband. Surprisingly, she is engaged to another member of our group, but there is no wedding in sight.

My husband is flattered, of course, but insists that Georgia sees him as a father figure. Well, she really has a father, thank you. Her behavior really bothers me, and she seems oblivious to my comments that her attentions are not welcome. I trust my dear husband, but I don't trust her. He thinks Georgia's flirting is harmless and that I am jealous for no reason. To his credit, he tries to avoid Georgia, so as not to upset me. I no longer enjoy these gatherings, but cannot stop attending because we are officers of the group. How do I deal with Miss Hot Pants?

— No Name, Please
Dear No Name: Your husband is the one who should tell Georgia to stop. His tolerance of her flirting is the same as encouragement, and he needs to be more forceful about telling her to leave him alone.

If Georgia continues stalking your husband, you might consider quitting the group, regardless of your status there.

Dear Annie: Every year, my company gives its employees donation cards to a charity, and we're instructed to put the cards in with our donations. The trouble is, if employees do not choose to contribute, our department heads lean on us. They want to claim 100 percent participation. Each year I have given a small donation.

I have co-workers who have been upbraided for not giving enough.

We've been told to give one hour's pay per month. This may not sound like much, but there have been times when money was tight around my household that the extra few dollars meant having gas money for the week.

I give when I can, to my church and to the charities of my choice.

I resent that my company tries to intimidate me into giving what I cannot afford to a charity I do not support. What should I tell my boss if he attempts to lean on me? Do I have any legal recourse? Please help.

— Not Feeling Charitable

Dear Not Charitable: Being "leaned on" is not illegal unless your job is threatened if you don't contribute. Simply give what you can and say "sorry" when you can't. If you feel unduly pressured, however, it might help to talk to your supervisor and say so. In fact, if several employees do this together, perhaps the boss will tone down the demands.

Preparing for the first step of a big step

When shopping for an engagement ring, good planning is key

BY RUDY ANTOMIETRI
AND MITCH SWANDA

Special to Stars and Stripes

More than a few servicemembers have returned home to their significant others with marriage on their minds. And, traditionally, before popping the question comes choosing the ring, which can be a major financial commitment. Let's face it — ring shopping can be an intimidating experience for a first-timer. But armed with some basic knowledge about jewelry and a good financial plan, you can make a confident purchase.

There are three major stages in the ring-buying process — finding the right ring, deciding how to pay for it and protecting your investment. Here is an overview of the essentials.

Choose ring carefully

Choosing the right ring is a personal decision that comes from the heart, but you also should use your head to make sure you're getting a quality product at a price within your means. Consider the following factors:

■ The budget. While that full-carat solitaire diamond may be a perfect fit for your bride-to-be, it also may be too big for your bank account. A common guideline is to spend an amount equal to one to two months' pay on an engagement ring, but first consider your other financial obligations. Being knee-deep in debt before the wedding bells ring can put unnecessary stress on a young marriage. It's best to seek a balance between glitter and good sense. Also keep in mind that diamonds don't have to be forever. Some jewelers offer diamond upgrade programs, allowing owners to "trade in" a smaller diamond for a larger stone down the road.

■ The four Cs. Carat (the weight of the diamond), cut (the shape of the stone), color (the amount of color in the stone) and clarity (the number of flaws inside or on the surface of the diamond) are the keys to unlocking the mystery of the diamond selection process. These attributes are standard measures of a diamond's quality, making it easier for non-experts to identify a valuable jewel. A diamond that ranks high in the four Cs is considered to be rarer, and thus more expensive. This explains why a smaller, near-perfect diamond may cost more than a large but flawed one. Plan to devote some time to learn more about the four Cs. You'll be happy you did.

■ The ring setting. Keep in mind that your fiancée may have a preference as to what the setting looks like. While yellow gold is most traditional, platinum, white gold and two-tone are all popular options at varying price ranges.

■ The jeweler. Not all jewelers are the same, so it's important to work with the organization you trust that offers the service you need. To the benefit of deployed servicemembers, some diamond retailers now provide comprehensive gem selection and quality service over the Internet. Whether shopping in cyberspace or at the mall, look for a retailer with an on-site gemologist that helps select the highest quality merchandise. Be sure the jeweler will provide a certified appraisal for the diamond you choose, and a satisfaction guarantee.

Don't rush the payment

After weeks or even months of searching, you've finally found the perfect ring to make her dreams come true. Even if you're comfortable with the price, how you pay for the ring is another decision that shouldn't be taken lightly.

■ Cash. If you've been saving up for that special purchase, your efforts to avoid debt are commendable. But plunking down a wad of cash for a ring may not be wise because it provides less protection than other forms of payment. Having a third-party record of the transaction will help you resolve any potential misunderstandings.

■ Credit card. Though relying on credit isn't always the best decision, purchasing jewelry is one example of a good time to use a credit card. The card creates a paper trail that allows the purchaser to deny payment if any wrongdoing is discovered. And today, lower interest rates, available to those with good credit make using a credit card an even more attractive option. As always, it's best to pay off the balance as soon as possible to avoid paying much more for the ring than it's actually worth.

■ Personal loan. Whether it's financing offered through the jeweler or a loan you secure from your own bank, this is another option with built-in safety features. If taking that route, don't sign on any dotted line until you've shown around and understand the terms of the loan, and how the interest charges affect the total cost of the ring.

Education, career can help spouses find 'bliss'

Susie Besaw, from the book "The Savvy Sailor's Spouse," is new to the military lifestyle but is eager to learn more about how to manage her family and her new lifestyle through the monthly Family Readiness Group meetings of her husband Jake's new command.

The next Family Readiness Group (FRG) meeting was about organizing and improving your career through education. We had two speakers: Carol from the FFS and Bob from Navy College. But before we heard from our speakers, we went through the FRG's committee reports. The most interesting committee report was from our Morale, Welfare and Recreation committee chair, Pat Barnett.

Pat told us her committee was helping to register several families with newborns for the Navy Relief's "Budget for Baby" class and Layette program. The Layette program, run entirely by Navy Relief volunteers, was designed to help new and prospective parents learn about the impact that a new baby may have on the family financial situation. Through a program of preventive education, Pat told us Navy Relief teaches sailors and their families about variations in pay and increased expenses; common consumer pressures targeted to new parents, and entitlements available through both government and private sources. Pat also mentioned the Layette, also known as a Junior Seabag, is issued to any eligible recipient who has recently had a baby or whose child will be born within six months. It consists of a coordinated set of bedding and clothing, a baby book, and a handmade item, such as a sweater set, afghan or quilt, all packed in a tote or duffel bag. Layettes are given to recipients after they attend a "Budget for Baby" class or complete an individual budget session with a society caseworker.

Evelyn, our president, then announced our speakers, Carol and Bob.

"Thank you, Evelyn," Carol said, as she and Bob walked to the front of the room. "I'm Carol Young, spouse employment coordinator at the FFS, and this is Bob Reymond from the Navy College Office. Tonight we are going to talk about education for military spouses and how it can better your career opportunities."

"For the purpose of tonight's presentation, I'd think of school as a combination of both gaining skills and personal growth."

"In my 15 years at the Fleet and Family Support Center, I've seen thousands of spouses — all looking for their bliss."

"Bliss?" Evelyn asked. There was light chatter in the crowd.

"Yes, bliss," Carol replied, "or when you've found a need you enjoy filling every day. I believe most people can fill many needs well, but only one of them would help them wake up every morning looking forward to filling the need they've chosen," Carol replied. "For the past 15 years I've been waking up looking forward to helping Navy spouses. I would say I've found my bliss."

"But what if you've found your bliss, but it doesn't pay enough to cover your bills?" someone asked.

"Try to decrease your bills without sacrificing your quality-of-life, if possible," Carol replied. "Sometimes it's not easy. If you need help dealing with your bills, then you can talk to one of our financial counselors at the FFS or talk to a Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society case worker. If you lower your monthly expenses and you still can't cover everything, then you need to find a need that earns more pay. More pay usually requires more skills and more skills mean talking to Bob at Navy College. I'll let Bob take it from here," Carol said.

"Thank you, Carol, everyone," Bob said in his soothing low voice. "I work at the local Navy College Office and want to spend a few minutes telling you what we do at Navy College.

"The Navy College has offices in 62 major shore installations around the world. These form the backbone of the Navy College program. The Navy College consists of a network of professional education services specialists, education technicians, and guidance counselors. These professionals counsel and advise Navy members and families on all matters relating to academic programs and tuition assistance. They also administer all on-base education programs. Some specific examples of how we help include:

■ Analyzing and defining your education goals and capabilities. Reviewing your previous college work and helping you apply.

■ Selecting courses and programs you will need to succeed. Helping you enter a suitable college, university or training school.

■ Finding ways to help you earn credit-by-examination.

YOUR MONEY

In-laws' will worries life

Q: All I want for Christmas is for my in-laws to make their estate plan.

A: I'm not greedy. I don't want their money, their property or their not-so-small business. What I really want is freedom from the fear that my husband—who is involved in the family business—and I will be forced to deal with the inevitable confusion, hassles and unnecessary expenses that come when people don't bother to plan.

We've tried to bring up this subject with them a few times, but they always brush us off by telling they'll do something about it later. My husband also has siblings, which further complicates matters even though we can't be involved in the business. How can we get his parents to act?

A: People have plenty of reasons to avoid estate planning. Confronting our own mortality isn't exactly fun, and good estate-planning attorneys aren't cheap.

But people who don't bother to create a will or living trust run the risk that the final, lasting impression they will leave is that they didn't care enough about their loved ones to spare them the "confusion, hassles and unnecessary expenses" you rightly foresee.

Each state has rules about who gets what when someone dies intestate, or without a will. Those rules can work for people who don't have much and don't care who gets what little they have. But the rules can be disastrous for people of means, like your in-laws. The state may decide that your company should go in equal shares to your husband and his siblings, for example—even if the siblings have shown no interest in or aptitude for the business and your husband has been running it single-handedly for decades.

Or the company could get stuck in probate, the court process that typically follows death, for months or years, making it difficult to run the business. In some states, including California, probate costs can eat up 3 percent or more of the gross estate—an expense that's well worth planning to avoid.

Finally, there is the issue of estate taxes, which are still with us even though they are being phased out under current law (they will be back in force in 2011 unless Congress acts to prevent that). Again, a little planning now could significantly reduce the costs that your in-laws' estate incurs later.

Because the direct approach hasn't worked so far, you might consider restarting the discussion by focusing on a somewhat "softer" issue. Mention that you and your husband have drawn up durable powers of attorney for health care that name someone to make decisions for you if they should become incapacitated. Ask your in-laws whom they would want to nominate as decision maker under similar circumstances.

If that discussion goes well, you—or better yet, your husband—can broach the topic of a more complete estate plan. Emphasize your well-founded fears that the business they worked so hard to build could be decimated by their demise.

The benefits of attractive financing incentives—such as zero percent interest for as much as 12 months—from some jewelers may be a better deal than outside loans when the total costs are figured. But be warned that some such financing deals may impose high interest rates or accrued interest charges on borrowers who don't pay off the note completely in the interest-free time period.

Peace of mind

A diamond ring may be one of the most valuable items you own that's frighteningly easy to lose. Many a heart has been broken by rings sliding down the bathtub drain or disappearing on the beach. While the sentimental value may be gone forever, having the ring covered by insurance can relieve the financial loss.

Homeowners and renters insurance policies may provide some protection for fire damage or theft, but the coverage is limited (typically up to $1,000) and will not reimburse the owner if the ring is lost. A personal articles floater is a great way to ensure the ring will be fully covered. "Floater" has no deductible, and usually cover lost items.

While you're working with your insurance company to insure the ring, it can be a good opportunity to ask how your other insurances might change as you begin married life.

Planning a proposal is an exciting time, marking the first step toward a new life as a married couple. By approaching the ring-buying process with knowledge and prudence, you'll set a strong precedent for many more financial decisions to come.

So it's OK to be a deserter?

So let me see here. Charles Jenkins deserts his Army post in South Korea in 1965, then goes on to live and work in North Korea, a member of the so-called "Axis of Evil." In 1980 he marries a Japanese woman who was abducted by the North Koreans in 1978 and proceeds to have a family. In 2002, his wife and daughters are allowed to return to her home country of Japan. She tries to persuade him to come to Japan but he is hesitant because he is afraid of being prosecuted by the United States for desertion and, while he hesitates with his family in Indonesia, he expresses the desire to return to North Korea.

He eventually gives in to his wife and comes to Japan. He then turns himself in to Army officials and is put back in uniform and paid his Army salary while awaiting disposition of his case. For about two months the family is living in Army housing, being paid Army salary, and being treated like celebrities (the post exchange was closed one day when I went to shop because they were in there shopping). He then pleads guilty to desertion and is sentenced to 30 days' confinement and a bad-conduct discharge. Thirty days?

He is currently serving his sentence while his family is still living in base housing. Then Japan's chief Cabinet secretary, Hiroyuki Hosoda, says: "We'd like to support the family so they can live in this country after Jenkins' custody is completed," referring to the financial assistance that the family will receive (probably about 300,000 yen a month) to help them live in Japan.

I have compassion for his wife and daughters, but am I missing something here? I have served honorably for nearly 22 years. This guy deserted the Army and will be getting more each month than I will be getting once I honorably retire from the military. Something is definitely seriously wrong here.

I say send him back to North Korea and let the family stay in Japan.

Kerry crowd got comeuppance

As a student of politics (and strong George W. Bush supporter), I was extremely pleased with the outcome of the election.

President Bush was re-elected despite the heinous behavior of the media and left-wing nuts (i.e. Michael Moore). He received the largest number of votes in American presidential history. He also won by more than 3,500,000 votes despite the daily barrage from the pro-Jerry Kerry media.

The Republicans also added to their majority in both the House and the Senate. Each Bush-bashing October surprise from the Democrats and their willing accomplices in the media was snuffed out by the American people. The people accepted them for what they were, attacks that had no basis in fact. The liberals just didn't seem to understand that the vast majority of the American people are not stupid. The can and did see through the phonyism of Kerry and John Edwards.

Kerry's many years in the Senate exposed him for what he truly is: a diehard, flip-flopping liberal. Although it is hard to believe, Kerry received a more liberal rating than Sen. Ted Kennedy. Amazing!

I would like to extend a heartfelt thanks to Moore, George Soros, Terry McAuliffe, Dan Rafter, Al Franken, The New York Times, James Carville, Bruce Springsteen and, of course, the Dixie Chicks. Thanks for the help. We couldn't have done it without them.

Hats off to infantrymen

In response to "Earning the CIB" (letter, Nov. 11), the writer says: "Just remember though you're still a bunch of pogs (wink)."

Well, you know what? I am proud to be a pog. I have nothing but respect for the infantry guys who go out and endure all kinds of unforgiving conditions while I sit in my heated equipment shelter on my eight- or 12-hour shift reading my book. Even if I was to be assigned some infantry duty while serving here in Iraq, I wouldn't ask for a Combat Infantryman Badge. What I go through on a daily basis and what the guys who do it for years at a time go through, the difference couldn't be made up in a few months of patrolling the streets.

I think about those guys who volunteer to go out there on a daily basis, and tip my hat to them. So guys, when you get back to base and want to call home or shoot some e-mails to family and friends so they don't worry too much about you, I'll be here waiting for you.

Health care rights urged

Active-duty military members should have the right to choose their own health care.

I don't think it's fair that there are choices within the TriCare system, but military members have to say in which one they will be enrolled into. I think that this would not only serve as a morale booster, but it would improve the appointment of doctors to ailing personnel.

In essence, healthy, good-feeling personnel is the key to mission accomplishment, front line or rear, especially since the two are interdependent.

OPINION

What newspapers are saying at home

The following editorial excerpts are selected from a cross section of newspapers throughout the United States. The editorials are provided by The Associated Press and other stateside syndicates.

Brawl smacks of new era The Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester, N.Y.

National Basketball Association commissioner David Stern was true to his name — and beyond — last weekend when he handed out long and expensive suspensions for players involved in the ugly brawl near the end of the Detroit Pistons-Indiana Pacers game [Nov. 19] in Detroit.

Stern didn't hesitate and he didn't hold back, and the punishments he meted out were fully in line with the offenses.

But the players weren't the only villains. What about the fan who dumped his beer on [Pacer Ron] Artest as he sparred with Piston Ben Wallace? The Pistons have the tape and the team should see to it that that person is identified and prosecuted....

The owners should follow Stern's lead. Get tough. Punish fan misconduct with arrest or permanent ejection. Stop or restrict alcohol sales. Put respect for the game first, above money and winning.

Problem beyond filibusters St. Louis Post-Dispatch

One of the most important decisions that President Bush and the new Congress face is who and how to put judges on the federal bench, including the U.S. Supreme Court....

For the past four years, Democrats have used filibusters, nuclear war, and the threat of Senate opposition to block some of Mr. Bush's extreme judicial nominees. Now Republicans are talking about their own "nuclear response," a vote on the use of the filibuster in judicial nominations.

Both sides should step back from the brink. The Democrats have overused the filibuster, but Republicans invite gridlock if they eliminate this powerful procedural tool....

If everyone were true to their word, we might avoid debilitating filibusters. If Mr. Bush appoints highly competent judges who won't read their personal views into the Constitution, and if the Senate avoids litmus tests, we might yet avoid mutually assured destruction.

Bury tactics with Arafat Williamsport (Pa.) Sun-Gazette

The death watch on Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat, ripe as it may have been with geopolitical drama, was in many respects a political and media scamman. It would be hard to imagine, in this post-9/11 world, a famous terrorist being welcomed in world capitals, feted with the Nobel Peace Prize, allowed to abscond with hundreds of millions (and perhaps billions) of dollars in foreign aid, never prosecuted for his crimes and spending his last days under the protection of a Western government. Yet that is what happened to Yasser Arafat in his last years and his last days....

The only good thing to say about Arafat is that he no longer stands the planet and restrains whatever Palestinian organization exists from building a civil society based upon the rule of law.

Yet Arafat has so poisoned the political atmosphere between the United States and the next generation of leaders, if they can outwit Arafat's terrorist successors, will have no easy task before them. But at least it will be possible.

Immigration plan is lacking San Francisco Chronicle

Because they live clandestine lives, it's easy to forget that most illegal immigrants work for U.S. employers and are effectively living permanently in the United States.

[This month] President Bush said he was at last willing to engage with Congress on how to bring illegal immigrants out of society's shadows. The problem is that his legalization program doesn't attack the crux of the problem, and it may actually enlarge the current illegal-immigrant population.

Bush is pushing a guest-worker program. Employers would have to certify they could not find U.S. workers to fill vacant positions. Immigrant workers would then be able to apply for three-year visas. After that, they would have to return to their home country if they were no longer needed....

The Bush plan might attract a new class of immigrant, who in the past was not willing to make a life-threatening voyage across the U.S. Mexico border (in addition to paying a "croyote" to guide them across). These presumably would be the migrants without roots in the United States who Bush envisions would return to their home countries. But it's a well-established axiom in immigration circles that "there is nothing more permanent than a temporary-visa program." Once here, it's likely many recent migrants would stay on, even after their visas expired....

Many U.S. businesses will be at the requirement that they first have to advertise to find U.S. workers before signing up someone from the guest-worker roster. Thus the plan may be used to attract immigrant advocates will reject it because it contains no clear pathway to citizenship and employers will reject it because of its complexity.... Bush should broaden his plan.... The president may also need to use some of his post-election "political capital" to bring along GOP conservatives who oppose any deal on immigration.

'MNF gives us the skinny Chicago Tribune

Finally! The ABC television network, not to be outdone by rival CBS in shimmeying over the fuzzy line of decorum and daring the Federal Communications Commission to slap it with a big fine, has pulled off its own Janet Jackson-like caper. In a segment that aired [Nov. 15] on "Monday Night Football" before the Dallas-Philadelphia game, Eagles wide receiver Terrell Owens and actress Nicole Sheridan of the ABC hit "Desperate Housewives" shared a seductive moment....

Let's see. Didn't NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue thunder about the league taking more control over telecasts after the Jackson bared-breast incident in the last Super Bowl? As if sex appeal and the NFL had never consorted? Please. Sex has been part of the NFL at least since the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders first pranced onto the field in their world-famous skimpy outfits decades ago. And the NFL sells sex and violence and the occasional touchdown....

We wearily rise to suggest, once again, that such incidents do not warrant the scorched-earth tactics that the FCC has perfected.... [n]or should they be an excuse to embolden Congress to dramatically increase fines. That's just a shortcut to more censorship on television....

Did ABC and the NFL blunder by not knowing their audience? Seems they may have known their audience too well.

Goss repeating mistakes The Daytona Beach (Fla.) News-Journal

CIA Director Porter Goss is repeating history at the nation's most important intelligence agency. Given the CIA's recent history, that's bad news for the agency, worse news for national security....

Two weeks before President Bush launched the Iraq invasion in March 2003, then-CIA Director George Tenet declared to Bush that there was a "slam-dunk case" that Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction....

Tenet had made his "slam-dunk" assessment on evidence from other branches of Bush's administration knew to be questionable, dubious, even false.... The war was launched anyway. Bush trusted Tenet. And Bush, it is no leap to say, had wanted his war with Iraq since his first year in office, possibly his first weeks. That no weapons of mass destruction were ever found became yet another catastrophic failure of intelligence on the CIA's part, and of judgment on the president's part....

In the end, the evidence was too overwhelming to keep Tenet and save the CIA from an overhaul....

Yet Bush immediately provided for insulation by other means with his appointment of Goss, a political rather than an intelligence appointment.... a politically driven tenure rather than a reforming one.

Darfur visit no panacea The (Baltimore) Sun

The U.N. Security Council's journey to Nairobi, [Kenya, this month] culminated with a significant commitment between the government of Sudan and rebel leaders in the south to resolve the country's 21-year civil war by year's end. But the two sides made the same pledge last year....

On a more pressing issue, the council's meeting.... offered no indication that the humanitarian crisis in the Darfur region would end soon.

Traveling to Africa may have been an extraordinary gesture.... [b]ut the only response that truly matters is the action taken by the Sudanese government....

It has the power to rein in the Arab militaries.... The grim prospect is that the situation in Darfur will continue as a humanitarian crisis indefinitely. The reality is that the people of Darfur will remain refugees until the government and the rebels in the south enter power-sharing agreement and a new Sudan emerges....

No one OK'd blank check The Daily News, Longview, Wash.

A post-election Associated Press poll found that two out of three voters prefer that President Bush and Congress balance the budget rather than reduce taxes further.... [F]ollowing congressional approval of a big increase in the nation's debt limit, some on Wall Street seemed to second that advice....

By not reimposing "pay as you go" budget rules that limit tax cuts and spending increases, Congress had effectively given the administration a blank check to continue running big deficits, Stephen S. Roach, chief economist at Morgan Stanley, told Washington Post writer Jonathan Weisman. "An open-ended license for this kind of fiscal irresponsibility is a recipe for disaster," Roach said....

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has issued the same warning repeatedly over the past year....

Now, of course, the federal government is back in the red, as deeply in the red as it's ever been. The past fiscal year's deficit amounted to a record $413 billion. To accommodate this fiscal irresponsibility, Congress [this month] had to increase the federal debt limit by $80 billion, to $8.8 trillion....

The only thing that prevents this heavy debt from rupturing this nation's economy is foreign investment. Congress' failure to demonstrate any resolve with respect to controlling its spending imperils investor confidence....

That's risky, because the moment foreign investors conclude that the United States is incapable of exercising fiscal discipline, they'll begin to dump their U.S. holdings. If and when that happens, interest rates are expected to soar, denying the economy the capital it needs to grow....

NIT title caps Wake's first week as a No. 1

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wake Forest's first week as a No. 1 team went pretty well.

The Demon Deacons won the Preseason NIT on Friday night, five days after topping The Associated Press' poll for the first time in school history.

Justin Gray had 21 points in Wake Forest's 63-60 victory over No. 18 Arizona, while Chris Paul, his backcourt mate and the leading vote-getter on the AP pre-season All-American team, struggled with just four points on 2-of-11 shooting.

"I felt like teams were gunning for us last season," Paul said when asked about facing opponents as a top-ranked team. "We still have a long way to go in terms of being a national powerhouse."

Cock Scip Prosser's team will play No. 5 Illinois on Wednesday night.

"We're trying to be a part of a national team, and so you have to play a national schedule," he said. "I don't know if I'll do that at infinity because it could become ad nauseum and I don't want that."

In the third-place game, Dwight Bravington scored 23 as Providence beat Michigan 72-63.

Gray, who also had 21 points in the semifinals against Providence, was selected the tournament MVP. He received five stitches over his right eye in the first half against Providence and he was kicked near the same spot against Arizona.

"I don't get wrapped up in MVPs and things like that. I'm happy for our team," Prosser said. "But he has a courage that's contagious."

Paul laughed when he was asked about Gray's injuries.

"He gets hurt all the time. I don't even look anymore because I know he's coming back in," Paul said. "He's just Justin."

The loss ended a 15-game winning streak in the Preseason NIT for Arizona (4-2), and it was the first loss in 12 games at Madison Square Garden for Wildcats coach Luke Olson, a run that started in 1973 when he was at Long Beach State.

"It's disappointing, but it isn't because our guys didn't play hard," Olson said. "It wasn't a case of our coming out and not being ready to play. I thought we played with a lot of passion."

The Demon Deacons went on a 13-2 run to go up 39-31 with 5:28 left. Arizona cut it to 61-60 with 1:26 remaining on a three-pointer by Hassan Adams, and got the ball back when Gray missed the front end of a 1-and-1 with 24 seconds left.

Arizona had one timeout left, but Olson didn't call it. Mustafa Shakur dribbled the ball at the top of the key and started his move with 7 seconds left. His jumper from about 8 feet was short.

Eric Williams made two free throws for Wake Forest with 12 seconds left and Arizona's chance to tie ended when Adams' turnaround three-point attempt at the buzzer bounced off the rim.

No. 13 Maryland 84, No. 25 Memphis 61: At Springfield, Mass., John Christ had 16 points and 10 rebounds and Nik Caner-Medley had 15 points for Maryland (3-0). Rodney Carney scored 23 points for Memphis (4-2).

No. 17 N.C. State 99, Campbell 44: At Raleigh, N.C., Cameron Bennerman scored 20 points in North Carolina State's fourth straight lopsided victory. Diago Aguiar scored 16 points for the Fighting Camels (1-2).

No. 19 Alabama 78, Minnesota 72: At Anchorage, Alaska, Earnest Shelton made five three-pointers and scored 29 points to lead Alabama (3-0) past Minnesota (2-1) in the semifinals of the Great Alaska Shootout. The Crimson Tide play No. 22 Washington in the championship game Saturday.

No. 21 Notre Dame 54, Charleston Southern 38: At South Bend, Ind., Chris Giumi scored 14 of his 17 points in the second half and Notre Dame (3-0) held Charleston Southern (1-2) to 16 points in the second half.

No. 22 Washington 96, Oklahoma 91: At Anchorage, Alaska, Nate Robinson scored 19 points and had eight assists, leading Washington (3-0) past Oklahoma (2-1) and into the championship of the Great Alaska Shootout.

Hayes sets the pace as Kentucky routs GSU

By Murray Evans

The Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Kentucky is promoting Chuck Hayes as an All-American candidate, using the slogan "All he does is win."

In his inimitable fashion, Hayes ensured the eighth-ranked Wildcats of yet another victory Friday night. He scored 12 of Kentucky's first 15 points to help the Wildcats breeze past Georgia State 77-59.

Hayes finished with 16 points and nine rebounds — matching Kelenna Azubuike for team highs in both categories.

It's the epitome of what a total player is all about," Kentucky coach Tubby Smith said. "You want him on the floor for everything he does."

Hayes scored six points in a 12-2 run that erased a brief Georgia State lead and put the Wildcats (3-0) ahead for good.

Kentucky's 38-23 half-time lead was constructed largely on Hayes' hands — he went 6-for-8 from the field while his teammates went a combined 6-for-20.

Hayes capped a 24-3 run to open the second half with a put-back that sent the Wildcats their biggest lead, 62-26 with 14 minutes left.

Georgia State (1-2) made nine second-half three-pointers, but the baskets came too late to make much difference, with the Panthers of the Atlantic Sun Conference never reducing the deficit to lower than 18 points.

"I don't think our guys thought the game was over," Smith said. "They changed some things and we didn't handle it right. We had a group in that just seemed to not get out and protect the three-point line."

The Panthers made 12 three-pointers — more than any Kentucky opponent last season — led by Marcus Brown, who went 4-for-5 from long range and scored 16 points. Georgia State shot 37.7 percent from the field overall.

Kentucky enjoyed a considerable size advantage and made it a point of emphasis to take the ball to the basket. As a result, the Wildcats had nine dunks and went 19-for-24 from the free-throw line.

Georgia State mostly jump shots and went just 1-for-4 from the line.

"That was a huge plus for them," Georgia State coach Michael Perry said.

Kentucky won despite a 2-for-15 three-point shooting effort.

Thanks to Hayes, Azubuike and Randolph Morris, who had 14 points and nine rebounds, Kentucky enjoyed a 44-31 edge on the boards.

"That's a very good basketball team," Perry said of Kentucky, "one that will challenge for a national championship."

Injury ruins Tech's win over Ark.-L.R.

By Paul Newberry

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — A gruesome injury ruined the night for No. 3 Georgia Tech.

The Yellow Jackets lost one of their most promising players when freshman Jeremis Smith dislocated his right kneecap in the closing minutes of a 79-54 victory over Arkansas-Little Rock on Friday night.

"I've never experienced something like that," freshman Anthony Morrow said. "I couldn't even look at his mom (sitting in the stands). I was almost teary eyed."

B.J. Elder scored 23 points and Georgia Tech (3-0) was never threatened after starting the game with a 23-1 run.

The injury to Smith cast a pall over the victory. With just 1:24 remaining and Georgia Tech leading 77-52, Zack Wright drove toward the basket for Arkansas-Little Rock.

Smith moved over, trying to take the charge, but landed awkwardly on his right knee and collapsed to the court. A hush fell over the crowd when the youngster screamed in agony.

A wheelchair was brought on the court, but Smith was unable to get to the floor. Finally, four teammates came out to lift him onto a stretcher and Smith was wheeled away as a trainer held the grotesquely distorted knee.

"I can't explain it," Elder said. "It was like his knee was completely turned around on the side. That's something I've never seen before."

Smith was taken to a hospital for X-rays, which provided a bit of good news: There was no other damage to the knee. He was being kept overnight and will undergo more tests on Monday.

Even in the best-case scenario, the injury would be similar to the one sustained by another Georgia Tech player, Theodis Tarver, before last season. He was out for 2½ months and didn't fully recover until this summer.

"You never want to see this happen to anyone, but especially to someone who works as hard as Jeremis does and loves to play as much as he does," coach Paul Hewitt said. "We've got to think about his long-term recovery. As far as our team is concerned, we'll be fine."

The Yellow Jackets had an easy time after struggling to a 60-59 victory at Illinois-Chicago on Monday.

Arkansas-Little Rock (1-2) missed 11 of its first 12 shots and had five turnovers while Georgia Tech was pulling away. The Trojans shot just 29 percent in the first half, trailed 38-21 at the break and got no closer than 13 in the second half.

After Brandon Freeman's jumper pulled the Trojans to 5-2, the Yellow Jackets scored 18 in a row.

Myskina rallies Russia in Fed Cup finals

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — French Open champion Anastasia Myskina pulled Russia into a 1-1 tie with defending champion France in the Fed Cup final on Saturday after U.S. Open winner Svetlana Kuznetsova lost the first singles match.

Nathalie Dechy gave France a big lift in the opener of the best-of-five series by defeating Kuznetsova 3-6, 7-6 (7-4), 8-6. Myskina then made sure Russia, bidding for its first Fed Cup title in its fifth trip to the finals, didn't entirely squander the first day, beating Moscow-born teenager Tatiana Golovin 6-4, 7-6 (7-5) at Krylatskoye Ice Palace.

Hedrick wins 1,500 skate

HEERENVEEN, Netherlands — Chad Hedrick of the United States won a 1,500-meter speedskating race Saturday with a personal-best time and moved into first place in the World Cup overall standings.

Hedrick, the reigning world champion in the 1,500, was timed in 1 minute, 47.06 seconds for his first World Cup victory this season. Simon Kuipers of the Netherlands was second in 1:47.31 and countryman Beorn Nijenhuis was third in 1:47.38.

After three of five races, Hedrick has 220 points, with Mark Tuitert of the Netherlands at 216 and Enrico Fabris of Italy at 200.

American third in Finland

KUUSAMO, Finland — Ronny Ackermann of Germany won the season-opening Nordic combined World Cup event on Saturday, with Todd Lodwick of the United States third.

Ackermann finished 29.7 seconds ahead of defending champion Hannu Manninen of Finland in the 15-kilometer freestyle cross-country skiing. Lodwick was 33.9 seconds behind Ackermann.

Japan's Daito Takahashi won the earlier ski jump portion of the competition, earning a 16-second starting advantage over Ackermann in the cross-country race.

That soon dissolved as Ackermann pulled into the lead, with Lodwick hanging on in second only to yield to Manninen's strong closing lap.

Dodd leads China Open

SHANGHAI, China — Welshman Stephen Dodd shot a 2-under 70 on Saturday to hang onto the lead after the third round of the China Open and keep alive his chances of a first-ever European Tour victory.

Dodd overcame a triple-bogey with five birdies to move to 8-under 208.

Denmark's Thomas Bjorn (68) and Soren Hansen (69) share second at 211 and Bradley Dredge of Wales was at 212 after a 70.

Jimenez leads in Korea

SEOUL, South Korea — Spain's Miguel Angel Jimenez fired a 3-under 69 on Saturday to take a one-stroke lead after the third round of the Korea Golf Championship.

Jimenez, coming off a four-victory season on the European tour, had six birdies against three bo-geys to finish at 2-under 214, one stroke ahead of American Aron Oberholser, who shot 70.

American Brian Bateman (73) and South Korea's Kebin Na (72) were at 216.

Irish star Padraig Harrington had a 76 to drop five strokes behind at 3 over.

Poutiainen wins in Aspen

ASPEN, Colo. — Finland's Tanja Poutiainen captured her second World Cup victory, charging down the hill on the second run to edge Sweden's Anja Paerson by .09 seconds in a World Cup giant slalom on Friday.

Second to Croatia's Janica Kostelic by 6 seconds after the first run, Poutiainen made up the time on the last half of her second run to finish in a two-run total of 2 minutes, 12.49 seconds.

Poutiainen had finished second to Paerson, the defending overall champion, in the World Cup season opener in Austria on Oct. 23.

Kostelic, a two-time overall champion who won three gold medals in the 2002 Salt Lake City Olympics but missed last season because of illness and injury, appeared headed to her first victory in nearly two years after a stellar first run. She couldn't keep up in the second heat, however, and dropped to third.

Pampling stays on top in Australian Open

SYDNEY, Australia — Australia's Rod Pampling got off to a rough start Saturday and finished with a 3-over-par 74, leaving him one stroke ahead of countryman Richard Green entering the last round of the 100th Australian Open.

Pampling began the third round with a four-stroke lead over Australia's Kurt Barnes after consecutive 67s, but dropped three strokes on the first five holes.

Pampling, who won The International in August for his first PGA Tour victory, was at 5-under 208 at the Australian Golf Club course, also the site of the inaugural tournament in 1904.

Green, a left-hander, was at 209 after a 67, and Barnes was another stroke behind after a 72.

But because the Longhorns' regular holder, wide receiver Tony Jeffery, left the game earlier with a rib injury, backup QB Matt Nordgren was sent in and he dropped the snap, causing Dusty Mangum to drive the kick along the ground.

The ensuing scrum ended on top of the ball in the end zone, giving Texas a rare 1-point safety that tied the game at 13.

"I'm a little embarrassed," Brown said. "I didn't know that was a rule."

Said A&M coach Dennis Franchione, "I don't know that I've ever seen a one-point safety. That was a unique call."

Texas took a 16-13 lead on its next possession when Nordgren held onto the snap and Mangum kicked a 44-yard field goal. With a strong wind at his back, Mangum extended the Texas lead to 19-13 with a 52-yarder later in the third.

Texas took complete control in the fourth, harassing the elusive McNeal with a tenacious rush that collected eight sacks and dominated the line of scrimmage. In one fourth-quarter sequence, he was sacked on three straight plays before throwing an interception.

Tigers win big at Little Rock

No. 14 LSU exacts measure of revenge from Arkansas

BY JAY HUGHES

The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — LSU made sure there wouldn't be any last-minute heroics by Arkansas this time.

Marcus Randall ran for two touchdowns and threw two more to Joseph Addai, leading No. 14 LSU to a 43-14 victory over Arkansas on Friday.

The Tigers earned a bit of revenge at War Memorial Stadium. Two years ago, the Razorbacks scored with nine seconds left to beat a ranked LSU team by one point.

"This is a difficult place to play," LSU coach Nick Saban said. "We hadn't won here in a while and they hadn't lost here in a while. It was nice to win."

Randall was 10-for-14 for 173 yards and had 79 yards rushing.

Alley Broussard added 81 yards rushing for the Tigers (9-2, 6-2 Southeastern Conference), who ended the game with 26 unanswered points.

"Coach kept reminding us about what happened here two years ago with a big old crowd that I felt comfortable running the ball," Randall said. "Their defense is pretty simple and our scout team did a great job imitating them all week."

The loss was Arkansas' first in 18 games at Little Rock since coach Houston Nutt and keeps the Razorbacks from qualifying for a seventh consecutive bowl game.

Matt Jones, hobbled by a hamstring injury, could not muster the flair that has often sparked the Razorback offense. The senior quarterback and the team's leading rusher was sacked three times and had minus-10 yards on the ground. Confined to the pocket, he was intercepted twice on 12-of-29 passing for 152 yards and two TD passes.

"We would have scored more if Matt had been healthy," Nutt said. "It was better than it was last week, but you know when he doesn't force the option he wasn't healthy."

Peyton Hillis ran for 66 yards and Steven Harris had five catches for 57 yards and a touchdown for Arkansas (5-6, 3-5).

"We dominated in the second half, which was critical," Saban said. "We controlled the ball and burned a lot of time. The defense had some good turnovers when the game was still a game. I am really proud of what our team accomplished."

Arizona surprises in-state rival

The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — Mike Stoops struggled through a difficult first year as coach at Arizona. He's 1-0, though, in the game that matters most.

Redshirt freshman Richard Koshchick threw three touchdowns — two to Mike Stoops and the Wildcats turned five takeaways into 24 points to snuff 18th-ranked Arizona State 34-27 on Friday.

"Finally, we showed we can do something offensively," said Stoops, who was his brother Bob's co-defensive coordinator at Oklahoma. "We attacked in a lot of ways."

record-breaking senior quarterback, left the game with an injury to his right shoulder with 7:30 remaining and his team trailing 34-20.

"His right shoulder was driven into the ground," Arizona State coach Dirk Koetter said. "It's shoulder surgery of some sort, but I don't know the degree."

Mike Bell rushed for 139 yards on 21 carries for the Wildcats (3-8, 2-6 Pac-10), who averaged 13 points per game going into the contest — last among 117 Division I-A teams. The victory snapped an 18-game losing streak against ranked teams for Arizona.

"They kind of underestimated us, thinking we were a team that was going downhill," Bell said. "But we always kept fighting."

Coach kept us positive. No matter what the situation was, we were going down fighting."

Arizona State (8-3, 5-3) lost four fumbles and had one interception to help Arizona reach a season-high point total.

"It's a no-brainer," Koetter said. "You're not going to beat anybody turning it over five times."

The loss probably won't affect Arizona State's chances for the Holiday Bowl, said bowl representative Larry Baber. The Sun Devils are expected to receive the invitation if No. 1 Southern California plays in the Orange Bowl and No. 4 California in the Rose Bowl.

Playoff push pits former teammates against each other

Jaguars coach Del Rio matched against Tice, energized Vikings

By DAVE CAMPBELL

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — As teammates with the Minnesota Vikings in the early 1990s, Mike Tice and Jack Del Rio became friends.

Both were tough-guy players who joined the coaching ranks after they retired, and the two men are now trying to lead their teams to playoff spots as this season enters the home stretch.

Tice's Vikings (6-4) host Del Rio's Jacksonville Jaguars (6-4) Sunday at the Metrodome and, as Tice said last week, you always want to beat your pals.

"We're both competitive," Del Rio said.

"He doesn't care if it's tidbits, winks, checkers, cards or whatever. He wants to win. I agree."

Tice played 14 seasons in the NFL as a blocking tight end, mostly with Seattle, and finished his career in Minnesota. That's when he met Del Rio, a middle linebacker who joined the Vikings in 1992 after playing for three other teams.

They didn't talk about being head coaches someday, but the groundwork for their current jobs was laid in those final seasons.

"I think playing the game for a long time helps you more than people think," Tice said. "It gives you a good sense of how the players feel. I think if you haven't played the game, sometimes it's hard for you to get a read on your players. ... You know how they feel when they lose. You know how they feel when they win. You know reality. You know what to ask of them — how far you can push the buttons."

Both Tice, in his third year as head coach, and Del Rio, in his second, have each influenced their players enough to the point the clubs seem to show some of the coach's personality. Both are well-liked in the locker room.

But while Tice and Del Rio have each guided noticeable improvements since taking over weak teams, they still have plenty to prove as head coaches in this season.

The Vikings, energized by a 22-19 comeback victory over Detroit last week, are optimistic about the rest of the season. Tied with Green Bay atop the NFC North, three of Minnesota's final five games are against teams with losing records. All-Pro wide receiver Randy Moss is expected back against the Jaguars after a hamstring injury kept him from catching a pass in the last five games — and playing the last three.

"I know he's going to have an explosive game when he steps out there on the field," said Nate Burleson, the primary target for quarterback Daunte Culpepper during Moss' absence.

The Vikings fell behind early each of the last four weeks, leading to three losses, and thus have failed to establish their usually productive running game. Michael Bennett, Oronio Smith and whoever else carries the ball figures to have a difficult time because Jacksonville has allowed just two 100-yard rushers in its last 25 games. Pro Bowl center Matt Birk, plagued by a painful abdominal injury, is out for about a month.

Moss, however, always opens up things for others with his dangerous ability to go deep — even if it's not yet 100 percent.

"Certainly it's not a secret that he commands a lot of attention," Del Rio said.

This game marks the return of an important offensive player on the other side, too. Quarterback Byron Leftwich, out for two games with a sprained left knee, is ready to assume control. He'll have to wear a brace, however.

"I've done some good things, and I've done some things I wish I wouldn't have done in these first 11 weeks of the season," Leftwich said. "Now it's just. Let's take it one game at a time and then try to find a way to win these last six."

Another strong game from Fred Taylor would help. He has rushed for 247 yards in his last two games, and the Vikings, until the second half last week against the Lions, struggled badly against the run.

"If you don't stop him from running," Minnesota defensive coordinator Ted Cottrell said, "oh, boy, it's a long day for you."

Boulware's season over before it ever began

The Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Baltimore Ravens outside linebacker Pro Bowl Boulware will not play football this season, remaining on the physically unable to perform list.

The four-time Pro Bowl linebacker underwent off-season knee surgery after an injury last season.

NFL briefs

against the Cleveland Browns.

After a grueling rehabilitation program, Boulware, 29, was on track to return until he suffered turf toe Nov. 1 in his second practice of the season.

"It's been pretty tough," Boulware said. "I would have to say these are probably two of the worst injuries I've had in my eight years playing in the NFL. I work on my knee for 10 months to get it healthy and it's feeling good, ready to play, and the day after I get out there to practice, my toe goes out on me."

The setback left Boulware, the franchise's career sacks leader, unable to practice or maintain his conditioning.

The Ravens' pass rush has thrived without Boulware at outside linebacker. Baltimore (7-3) has 30 sacks, second in the NFL behind the Pittsburgh Steelers' 31. Terrell Suggs leads the team with eight sacks.

Bears lose Brown for year

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Veteran guard Robert Brown will undergo neck surgery and miss the remainder of the season.

Brown, an eight-time Pro Bowl selection who started 136 games for the Buffalo Bills from 1995 to 2003, signed with the Bears as a free agent. He missed Thursday's loss to the Dallas Cowboys because of the injury.

Rams release Landeta

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams made a move to shore up shaky special teams on Friday, releasing punter Sean Landeta and signing Kevin Stemke.

Landeta, 42, is one of his 20th NFL season and is one of only two NFL players still in action in the NFL. But he's 31st out of 33 punters in the NFL with a net average of 32.5 yards.

Stemke has two games of NFL experience with the Oakland Raiders in 2002.

Hall returns to Redskins

ASHBURN, Va. — Washington Redskins kicker John Hall will be back in uniform Sunday after missing five games with a groin injury.

Hall strained his groin during practice on Oct. 14. He was 7-of-9 on field-goal attempts before the injury.

Bledsoe, Bills due for road win in Seattle

By TIM KORTE

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Drew Bledsoe doesn't get back to his hometown of Walla Walla, Wash., too often these days. A road game in Seattle is as close as it gets to a homecoming for the Buffalo Bills quarterback.

"It will be great to be back out there in the Northwest, to have some friends and family," Bledsoe, a former Washington State standout, said. "That'll all be pregame and postgame. We've got to focus on beating a good Seattle team."

Exactly how good? That's the subject for debate.

The Seahawks (6-4) are leading the NFC West, but they've been erratic since opening 3-0. They've been slowed by a stop-and-go offense, injuries to key defensive players and unreliable special teams play.

Still, coach Mike Holmgren sees the bright side. The Bills (4-6) did Seattle a huge favor last week by beating NFC West rival St. Louis, and now it's up to the Seahawks to seize control down the stretch.

"If we slog our way through wins, I'll take that," Holmgren said. "Ideally, you'd like to not make any errors. If we keep winning ballgames and just keep battling ... I still think we're capable of playing better football."

For the second straight week, the Seahawks have an issue at quarterback. Matt Hasselbeck was questionable after missing last weekend's 24-17 victory over Miami with a deep bruise above his right knee.

Trent Dilfer stepped in, completing 14 of 28 for 196 yards with one touchdown with two interceptions. He started strongly, throwing a first-quarter TD pass to Jerry Rice, but the offense stalled in the second half.

Buffalo Bills at Seattle Seahawks

AFN-Sports

Game time is Central European.

Blame it on rust. It was Dilfer's first start in more than two years.

"It's not the quickness and speed," he said. "It just wasn't as clear. Maybe only a quarterback can understand that. It wasn't as crystal clear as it has been in the past, and that's from not playing."

Seattle won't have receiver Koren Robinson, sitting out the first game of a four-game suspension for violating the NFL's substance-abuse rules. Rice will start for the second straight week.

Buffalo is trying to get rolling away from home after losing its previous four road games this season. Going back to last year, Buffalo has lost 10 of 11 on the road, including six straight.

Bledsoe, in particular, has had it rough on the road, throwing 14 interceptions with seven TDs in that span.

He rebounded with three touchdowns last week against the visiting Rams, all to tight end Mark Campbell. If it helps Bledsoe get his head straight, maybe he should pretend it's another home game.

In a sense, it is, though Bledsoe has returned to southeastern Washington only a few times over the past two years. His parents now live in Montana and most of his high school friends have left Walla Walla.

He was asked if he expects to feel like he's home again Sunday.

"I hope so. It will be a challenge," Bledsoe said. "We haven't played well as a team on the road. The Hawks defense presents a challenge. You just don't get anything easy against them. You've got to earn everything."

Falcons out to prove they belong among elite

New Orleans
Saints at Atlanta
Falcons

AFN-Pacific

Game time is Central European.

BY PAUL NEWBERRY
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Falcons have a record that puts them among the NFL's elite.

Even so, they're viewed as something of an interloper among teams such as New England and Philadelphia.

The Patriots are the defending Super Bowl champions. The Eagles are generally considered the best team in the NFC. Then there's the Falcons, still trying to convince skeptics they're worthy of being mentioned in the same breath.

"We think those teams are at the same level we are," cornerback Kevin Mathis said. "But a lot of people aren't giving us the respect that we think we deserve."

Indeed, the Falcons (8-2) have to prove they're not the latest one-year wonder in the NFL. This team won only five games in 2003 — granted, Michael Vick was out much of the season — and has never even had consecutive winning seasons in its 39-year history.

Atlanta can take a major step toward winning its third division title by beating the New Orleans Saints (4-6) on Sunday. The Falcons have a commanding four-game lead in the NFC South and are poised to raise another banner to the Georgia Dome roof.

"We know we can play with any team in this league," defensive tackle Chad Lavalais said. "Regardless of the depth of the team, and the fans say this team or that team is the best. But this is football. This isn't basketball or baseball, where it's a best-of-seven. In one game, we can beat anybody."

The Falcons haven't earned as many style points as, say, Indianapolis. They had to thwart a 20-point comeback to beat woe-filled San Francisco. They failed to score a touchdown in a victory over Arizona. And they held on for dear life in a 14-10 win over the Giants last weekend.

First-year coach Jim Mora couldn't care less if his team appears to be winning ugly. To him, every victory is a thing of beauty. "It shows true resolve that we've been able to hold on," he said. "You'd like to go for 14 points every quarter, but it just doesn't happen against the defenses we're playing now."

The Saints are a team in disarray, coming off a 34-13 home loss to Denver that drew a harsh assessment from owner Tom Benson. He called it the worst performance he'd seen and compared his players to a high school team.

Even so, New Orleans is still right in the thick of the playoff race. Thanks to parity, the Saints are only one game out of an NFC wild-card berth.

"We are not down and out," quarterback Aaron Brooks insisted. "Our heart is still beating a little."

It won't be for long if the Saints keep playing like they did a week ago. They got off to another slow start, trailing 14-0 after Denver had run only four offensive plays. New Orleans has scored only 10 first-quarter points this season, all in a Week 2 victory over the 49ers.

"If you look at all the teams that have a chance to be in the playoffs, we're all the same," coach Jim Haslett said. "We're all inconsistent. The team that puts together three or four wins in a row is going to be the team that makes the playoffs."

If the Saints can pull things together, the schedule certainly looks favorable. They still have two games left against Atlanta, but their remaining opponents all have losing records.

"This thing is not over yet," Haslett insisted.

Vick is coming off the fifth 100-yard rushing game of his career, breaking Billy Kilmer's league record for a quarterback.

For all the wear and tear on his body, No. 1 feels amazingly strong. "I've been bumped around a little bit and bruised a little bit, but it's nothing I've had to go to the treatment room for," Vick said. "I've been real good through 10 games, and let's just hope the next six will be the same way."

Vick's passing statistics aren't real gaudy — only nine touchdown passes and 165 yards per game through the air — but that's OK with Mora. He's more impressed with the quarterback's 20-10 record as a starter.

"Mike wins," Mora said. "You look at his record, it's not always pretty in terms of statistics and quarterback rating. You might need to throw those things out when you talk about Mike Vick. He just wins."

No. 6 Texas tops A&M again, stays in hunt for BCS berth

BY JIM VERTUNO

The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — Texas took care of its fiercest in-state rival and ensured at least one more week of bickering about the Bowl Championship Series.

Cedric Benson ran for 165 yards and a touchdown Friday to lead No. 22 Texas to a 26-13 victory over No. 22 Texas A&M, the Longhorns' fifth straight win over the Aggies.

Afterward, Texas coach Mack Brown made a passionate case for his team to win an at-large bid in the BCS.

"If you've got a vote, vote for us," Brown said, pleading directly to voters in The Associated Press writers poll. "I'm asking you to do that and I'm asking everyone across the nation."

"This team deserves to be in the BCS," he said. "They deserve to go more than some teams that are being talked about."

The AP poll is one of the factors used to determine the BCS standings.

The victory could get the Longhorns (10-1, 7-1 Big 12) their first BCS bid if they get a big enough boost in the standings to pass fourth-place California. Texas fans chanted "B-C-S!" after the game.

California, which only a week ago thought it had locked up a berth in the Rose Bowl, needs a win Dec. 4 at Southern Mississippi to fight off the Longhorns, who are fifth in the standings.

Another team out West, Boise State, could ruin the party for both of them. If Boise State creeps into the top six in the BCS, they would join Utah in the two at-large berths, knocking Texas and California out of the mix.

Where! As complicated as that sounds, the game itself was full of strange and rare plays that saw momentum swing back and forth during the first three quarters.

Quarterback Vince Young had 224 yards total and a touchdown run for the Longhorns. His counterpart, Reggie McNeal, passed for 247 yards and a touchdown for A&M (7-4, 5-3).

The teams traded touchdowns and missed extra points in a tight first half. Benson had 105 yards on 18 carries in the half, but one play on which he didn't get the ball proved costly for the Longhorns.

After driving 88 yards to the A&M 1, Texas was on the verge of punting the ball into the end zone with less than 30 seconds left in the half. Instead of handing off to Benson, the 6-foot-5 Young tried to leap over the line of scrimmage.

Holding the ball in his right hand, he stretched for the goal line and A&M's Justin Warren punched it loose. The ball bounced right to Jonte Buhl, who scooped it up and dashed 98 yards for a touchdown and a 13-6 Aggies lead at halftime.

The play stunned Texas, which thought

Young had crossed the goal line — although television replays showed he didn't. Young stood looking around while Buhl raced for end zone and Brown grimaced on the sideline.

Then things got really weird.

After forcing the Aggies to punt on the first possession of the third quarter, Texas'

Michael Griffin blocked the kick and Bobby Tatum recovered it for a TD.

"We knew we had to get momentum back. That was huge," said Texas senior linebacker Derrick Johnson, who had eight tackles and one sack. "The posse came up with a big play."
